Editorial.

THE EDITOR wishes to compliment the Senior class on their artistic class pins.

WE COULD still use several more stories for our Literary Department. "Wake up."

DURING the past month a mandolin club of sophomores has been organized under the direction of Mr. Brooks.

THE MAY number of the REGISTER will be in the hands of the girls of the O. H. S., and from present indications will eclipse anything before issued.

ON THE 5th of April the teachers of the Omaha High School presented Mr. Beals with an elegant bouquet of roses as an appreciation of his services in the Omaha High School for the past thirty-nine years.

OWING to the fact that our publishers removed their apartments the last week it was impossible to get the REGISTER out any sooner. We trust our patrons will bear with us and we will endeavor to have our April number out on time.

HURRAH! for our Demosthenian boys, who gained such a signal victory over the Ciceronian Debating Society of Lincoln at the City Hall March 9th.

The school is justly proud of this organization and assures its hearty support toward the furthering of its interests.

MR. WATSON SMITH, class editor for 1902, handed his resignation to the editor last month, which was accepted. Mr. Lawrence Sidwell was chosen to take his place. The editor wishes to thank Mr. Smith for his valuable services while on the staff, and welcome the new class editor.

DURING THE past month the Seniors and Juniors had an opportunity to listen to a speech delivered by the well-known Hamilton W. Mabie, scholar and critic of New York. The treat was a rare one and judging from appearances everyone enjoyed it to the utmost. Mr. Mabie is a speaker of rare ability, possessing a wonderful power of attracting his audience. His force of speech, his excellent ideas, won for him the admiration of the school.

THE SCHOOL during the past month has lost two of its most promising members, James Foley, who died on March 10th, and Hugh C. Dalzell, March 25th. Both bodies were escorted by a squad of High School Cadets to the cemetery, where a last tribute of friendship and esteem was paid to the parted ones. The school extends its deepest sympathy to the bereaved parents.

It is with great regret that the members of the Omaha High School learn that Mr. James Godfrey will not return to us this term. The school loses a most faithful class member, an efficient captain and one of its best friends. We wish Mr. Godfrey success in his new vocation and trust that he may return to us next year. Mr. Godfrey leaves a vacancy in the editorial department of the REGISTER, which will be filled by Mr. Arthur Jessen.

What are our societies organized for? Does it mean that they are an organized band of students who may "flunk" in studies, but by making a good record in the society may escape that terrible word "failed?" We believe that the society is organized primarily in order that the students' work may become more really, more practical and more personal. Many students in the High School might contemplate these things with profit to themselves and the High School.

Dear Sir: According to all the information, reports and estimates that I am able to receive, there are in Nebraska a large number of deaf children not in school. Many parents of deaf children permit them to grow up in ignorance, not knowing that it is possible for them to receive an education, or that the state provides such education as freely for the deaf as for the hearing.

The school is absolutely free to the deaf and dumb of Nebraska. That pupils deaf or dumb to such an extent that they cannot acquire an education in the public schools, are entitled to admission into this institution.

It is the earnest desire of the management to bring into this institution every deaf or dumb boy or girl that may be entitled to the benefits of an education here; and as one of the means of bringing the knowledge of this institution to the parents of such children in your county, we kindly ask that you publish such parts of this communication as you may be able to use, trusting that in this way we may bring a knowledge of our work to every person in need of our assistance.

Thanking you in advance for the assistance that you are able to render, I am sincerely yours,

H. E. DAWES, Sup't.

Pictures by Telegraph.

Ever since Morse invented the telegraph, men, learned men, have been studying to send pictures by telegraph. Edison, the Wizard, as he is called, racked his brain in vain to solve this problem, but this great man, wonderful as have been his inventions, lacked that requisite of Josh Billings, "Hoss sense," in which the inventor of photo-telegraph was fully competent. The inventor's idea is simply to have an artist draw on a piece of pliable sheet metal the likeness, in non-conducting ink, of the person or whatever it happens to be whose likeness is to be telegraphed.

This picture, when placed on a revolving cylinder, passes under a metal point which makes and breaks the current as it comes in contact with the lines of the picture by moving the point sidewise. A ——— of an inch after each revolution a complete picture is reproduced at the other end of a similar machine, except that instead of a metal point it is furnished with a pencil point. If my readers have become interested in this short description of the photo-telegraph I can refer them with great pleasure to the April Pearson's magazine.

Milton's Satan.

ARTHUR JESSEN.

In Milton's Satan we find the highest conception of mental development. He has that keen foresight and clear logical manner of reasoning out his maneuvers and of calculating results and developments that always commands respect and admiration. Through all the varying evolutions of his crafty schemes we never lose sight of the one single motive that burns in his breast, his intense hate for the Almighty and his desire for revenge. Milton has so aroused our interest in this highly intellectual being, that we are brought to feel as he does and to be in sympathy with him in his malevolent and dark plottings. There is much to admire in his character; take, for instance, his calm and reserved acceptance of circumstances after he has been defeated; not with the cloth of Belial or Mammon, content to remain forever in a dull lethargy; but with the feeling that "to the victor's belong the spoils," and now that he has brought ruin and destruction upon himself he must bear up unflinchingly with manly courage and fortitude. He glories in the unimpaired intellect that remains to them and in the courage never to submit or yield and in the "unconquerable will." His proud and haughty spirit in con- sive attitude stands out "grandly eminent;" we admire him for being firm and for clinging tenaciously to his purpose even if it is a foul one. His ingenuity and cleverness are everywhere apparent; the reasons for his being ruler of hell; the recounting, in the mouth of Beelzebub, of the awful dangers attendant to a journey from hell in order to dissuade his followers from undertaking the trip and consequently to gain more glory for himself; his rather modern, perhaps correctly termed Yankee instinct for striking bargains, as when he inquires of Chaos the way to the New World; all these serve to indicate a master mind, a mind wide-awake to possibilities and conditions. All that is cunning, crafty and scheming is found in Satan in profusion; he is as keenly analytical of his subjects as one could well imagine; he knows their foibles and their "weak spots," so to speak; how their wounded pride is nursed by the least word of commendation from him; in fact, he knows their very all and can command respect and attention from them whenever he chooses. He keeps up their courage by excusing their fall from heaven; and, judging from such expressions as "emptied Heaven," he seems boastful; but it is reasonable to suppose that this is done for the benefit of his followers. None realize their awful situation as thoroughly as himself; and he has to keep his followers hopeful, hence he deludes them with these vain hopes. His desire for show can, with the same degree of fairness, be attributed to his desire to inspire his followers and to make them confident of their might and power. His irony is very effective when occasion demands; note, for instance, his sarcasm when he arouses the host of hell from their stupor on the burning lake:

"Or have ye chosen this place
After the toil of battle to repose
Your wearied virtue for the ease you find
To slumber here, as in the vales of Heaven?"

Or in this object posture have ye sworn
To adore the Conqueror?"

He is fearless and bold on all occasions, and his perseverance is remarkable. We seem to feel his discomfiture in his passage through the scattered elements of Chaos, as he

"O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way,
And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or lies."

Truly this indicates perseverance.

But Milton has not let this intellect go without a body; quite on the contrary, he has clothed it in a physique that is magnificent and wonderful. If there ever was a case of a "sound mind in a sound body," we find it in Milton's Satan. Now that we have learned of the marvellous extent of his intellectuality, if we draw a parallel on the physical side we begin to get an adequate idea of Satan in this aspect. Lowell has fitly described the grandeur and sublimity produced by Milton's vagueness, when he says: "Milton is too wise to hamper himself with any statement for which he can be brought to book, but wraps himself in a mist of looming indefiniteness." We see this characteristic of Milton's diction well brought out in his description of the physical Satan; a form that "stretched many a road," a voice "that called so loud that all the hollow deep of hell resounded," and a figure that when flying looked like a fleet in the distance. Think of the physiognomy of a man whose "face deep scars of thunder had intrenched," and who had "brows of dauntless courage and considerate pride awaiting revenge;" whose eyes gave forth a gleam of cruelty but mingled with

"Signs of remorse and passion, to behold

The fellows of his crime * * *

* * * * from eternal splendors flung
For his revolt—"

His body is compared to a tower in size. All these indefinite comparisons give us a man of immense stature, a man not to be measured in feet or inches, but only by an image which the most vivid imagination falls short of conceiving.

This then is Satan as Milton has shown to us—a man of "shape and gesture proudly eminent," large of body and agile of motion; but above all this physical grandeur, and that which Milton in the mouth of Satan considers highest and dearest, is the intellect—the mind that is ever awake to the situation, that is ever active in planning, that perseveres through all vicissitudes and that "hopes and endures and is patient."

A Bear III

D. W. P., '00.

I had learned that a party of young tourists was to be formed to take an all night's trip to the summit of the Peak, and with little difficulty I received permission to become a member of the party. The plan of the trip was to spend the evening around a camp fire part of the way up, and then to continue the trip in time to reach the Peak and see the glorious sunrise and to this I heartily agreed.

The first part of the trip was taken leisurely and in enjoyable conversation. Naturally each had many thrilling experiences or laughable incidents to tell about and it seemed that bears figured quite prominently in the general drift of the conversation. At any rate, my mind was so full of bears that when we came to the camping place and found no fire wood, I gladly volunteered to go in search of some, thinking that perhaps I might relieve my mind with the change. With two other young men I set out, but to my chagrin I found that instead of escaping from the stories I was to hear some even more blood-curdling than any yet related. One of my companions was relating a personal adventure and the scenes were brought back so vividly to his mind that he instinctively drew his revolver and examined it to see if it were in good condition. Seeing his actions we also started to fumble around for our revolvers and began to bemoan the fact that we had no rifles. We forgot we were in search of wood and in our excitement began to move our restless eyes over the moonlit rocks.

Suddenly he who was relating the story gave a start and stood stock still. He pointed his finger toward an object and tried to move his lips. His tongue clove to the roof of his mouth, but finally he succeeded in gasping, "A bear! a bear!" We halted and without moving our bodies craned our necks till we saw what our comrade was pointing at. "It must be a bear, see, it moves its head from side to side."

We cocked the triggers and took aim at the same time preparing to dodge the rush of the beast. More cool than the others, I remembered that I had a pen knife in my pocket and I drew it and prepared for action. All fired at the same time, but the animal did not move. We fired again, and still once more. Perhaps the beast was waiting for us to fire all our loads! Almost simultaneously we fell on our knees and cautiously crept for the nearest shelter.

As soon as all had reached safety another volley was fired, but still no response from Bruin.

Finally I summoned up enough courage to creep closer and then at least when I was in line with the moon and the supposed bear, I discovered to my surprise that it was only a bush which had frightened us so and that the moving head was merely a branch swaying in the wind. We were so ashamed of ourselves and thought so much on our reception at camp that we forgot our errand and returned empty handed. But the party was so interested in our wonderful tales of how we had been surprised by a great beast and had finally driven her off full of bullets, but still alive, that it was time to recommence the journey long before all were satisfied.

Obituary.

James Foley, a member of the Junior class, died Saturday, March 10, at his home on South Twentieth street. Although he had only attended school but a short time he had become very well known and all are grieved at losing such a friend and comrade.

A squad of cadets attended the services at his home in this city and accompanied the body to Blair, where where they paid the last tribute of esteem and respect.

Hugh C. Dalzell, a member of the Sophomore class, died Monday morning, March 4, at 2 o'clock. He was at school the preceding Friday and apparently in his usual good health, so that his sudden death was a shock to all. The funeral occurred Wednesday afternoon and was attended by a large number of his schoolmates. Four of the cadets acted as pallbearers and a firing squad of ten attended the remains to Forest Lawn to pay the last tribute of friendship and esteem.

Resolutions.

At a meeting of the class of 1902 held Friday, April 6, 1900, a committee was appointed to draw up resolutions of sympathy and condolence to be sent to the parents of the late H. C. Dalzell.

The following are those which were adopted by the class:

Whereas, It has seemed good to the ruler of the universe to remove from among us our beloved friend and classmate, Hugh Campbell Dalzell, therefore, in view of the loss we have sustained and the still heavier loss to his respected relatives, be it

Resolved, That the members of this class hereby desire to express their sense of bereavement and grief at the loss of one of their members, and to record the enjoyment they have had in the genial and social qualities of the deceased.

Resolved, That we sincerely sympathize with the relatives and near friends of our late beloved classmate and that we respectfully commend them for consolation to that Divine Power which, though sometimes inscrutable in its dispensations, yet "doeth all things well," feeling sure that to them, as to us, there is comfort in the knowledge that the deceased was not only honorable and manly in all respects, but was a consistent Christian.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the parents of the deceased as a testimonial of grief and sympathy, the same be published in the High School Register and also a copy be put on the records of the class.

MISS BECKETT, Committee.

On March 16 Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rees entertained at dinner those teachers of the High School who had been instructors of Miss Henrietta and Mr. Samuel Rees during their High School course.

The dining room decorations were in Seniors colors, green and gold; a great bed of yellow tulips and jonquils with green leaves and ferns, forming an attractive center piece. During the last course the following "Nameless Story" was discussed. In it will be found the names of the fourteen teachers who enjoyed Mrs. Rees' hospitality.

Next month the names of the teachers will be published, and any REGISTER subscriber who will hand in a complete list will be acknowledged in April number.

A NAMELESS HISTORY.

In the early days of Omaha, railroads had not stretched their iron arms so far westward as Nebraska or western Iowa, and the city could only be reached by water; houses were few and far between, and habitations for civilized beings could not be snider. A man could not come on a ship; he had to make use of the river steamboats, which made daily trips up and down the Missouri. Those carrying passengers were known as side-wheelers. They were manned by a reckless, roystering crew, with ne'er a craven among them. The Indians were at times quite troublesome and often the early settlers imagined that every quaken-bush concealed a hidden foe—a creeping, stealthy enemy who never marched with fifers and drummers at their head. While the men had many struggles, the women had troubles with which to scope. Land, while divided into lots, was not fenced, and as supplies were not easy to always keep on hand, the nearest neighbors were so far away that borrowing and gossiping were difficult. The women had but common dishes and no wedge-wood with which to adorn their tables. There was no paving—macadam, stone, or even cedar block. While the town was almost devoid of social attractions, Valentine day always brought its love-tokens to the young people. How different now when in the city there is so much improvement, and in the country all the land is green. It is hard to make you believe that this city has grown to its present magnificent proportions in so short a time; that the man who made the original surveys for the town is still living among us.

After dinner music was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. Rees.

Mr. Homer Payton of South Omaha won first honors at the North Nebraska Oratorical contest at Wayne by a superb rendering of the arena scene from "Quo Vadis." Mr. Payton was trained by Omaha's talented elocutionist, Miss Lillian Fitch, and he certainly showed the results of most excellent training. The judges awarding him first place unanimously.

The P. S. L. held a meeting for parliamentary practice. Great interest was shown by the girls and a most exciting debate was carried on by two of the members. There was an especial desire shown to amend amendments. The girls learned quite a little about parliamentary rules. Three mock-motions were put before the club. All the members who were there said it was the most interesting meeting held this year.

The P. L. S. gave a reception at the home of Miss Beth Williams Friday, March 30th. Fudge was the main feature of entertainment. An interesting literary program was also rendered.

March 9th, at the city hall, the Demosthenian Debating Society defeated the Ciceronian Debating Society from Lincoln. Our school was represented by Messrs. Lewis, Hillis and Jorgensen. Those from Lincoln were Messrs. Mason, Wheeler and Tobin. Throughout the debate the speakers showed an unlimited amount of talent and won much applause. When the judges rendered their decision Omaha had won by 10 points. Three cheers for the D. D. S. On April 27th our club will debate against Beatrice. Let everyone turn out and make it an epoch in the history of the D. D. S. The High School orchestra will furnish the music.

JUNIOR PLAY.

The first play given at the O. H. S. this year was presented by a company of talented actors from the Junior class.

The play, a comedy entitled "A Ghostly Strategy," in two acts, proved a "winner," and received much applause from the audience.

Mr. Powell was especially strong and played with great coolness and ease of movements.

Miss Jorden, who took the part of Violet Drew, won much praise for herself, her actions being those of perfect grace.

Mr. Schrieber was the comedian of the lot and played his part like an old veteran. He is unquestionably the best comedian that ever played at the O. H. S.

Miss Carter, who took the part of a stage struck maid, kept the audience in a continual uproar and proved herself well fitted for the part.

Mr. Cramer and Mr. Jorgenson added much to the play and received many compliments.

Prospects for good athletics were never brighter in our school before. The campus is daily alive with athletic aspirants for the teams.

Mr. Will B. MacNider of Sioux City visited Omaha last month for the purpose of arranging a meet between our school and Sioux City.

Mr. Benedict and Captain Painter say that the school will have the strongest teams both in base ball and track athletics ever known. Among those out we note Welch, Marsh, Mullen, Ainsworth, Johnson, Reed, Foster, Hall, Waller, Tracy, Moore and many others.

On the second Monday in March the regular meeting of the Athletic Association was to be held in room 43, but was postponed until Wednesday, when the work on the constitution was taken up. After the amendment it was found necessary to elect a vice president and a secretary. These officers were elected: Miss Dumont, vice president; Miss Nell Painter, secretary. The following program was rendered: Piano solo, May Welsh; selection, O. H. S. Male Quartet; recitation, Mrs. McArdle.

April 9th the A. A. held their regular meeting in room 43. It was decided to organize a basket ball and a hand ball team, the captains to be appointed by the president and vice president. Mr. Benedict presented before the meeting a beautiful bat, the gift of Mr. Wigman. This is to be a trophy to be awarded to the class team winning the greatest number of class games. The following short program was also rendered:

Vocal solo, Miss Nandain.

Piano solo, Miss Rees.

Piano solo, Mr. Stuart B. MacDiarmid.

All the company's now have full equipment and should put up a strong fight at the competitive drill next May.

It has been rumored that the High School Battalion is to camp out this coming spring. This undoubtedly would be a rare treat for the boys, although strict military discipline will be demanded.

The various officers are in favor of this plan and it will in all probability be carried out.

The Cadet Officers' club, founded in 1894 by the officers of four companies of cadets, has now grown into one of the strongest organizations of the High School. The object of the club is to bring the officers of the various companies in closer contact with one another and to establish a friendly feeling which does not exist in similar military organizations.

For the purpose of establishing this geniality it has been the custom once each year to give what is called the officers' "hop," the expense of which is defrayed by the Officers' Musical, as everyone knows. This year's musical was the best ever given in the High School and a great success financially, netting a profit of almost one hundred dollars. With the money obtained from this source and sale of tickets the Millard hotel has been secured for April 20, 1900. Large flags will cover all the available wall space and doorways and palms will completely hide Dimmock's orchestra as it plays.

Some may imagine that dancing will be the only feature of the evening. On the contrary there will be several rooms full of inviting cozy corners and gay with "P. L. S." colors, where those who do not dance may enjoy games of various kinds. In one room a harpist will be an added attraction. In short the hop this year will undoubtedly eclipse all others and stand as an epoch in the history of the Cadet Officers' club.

Sergeant Redell, to be first sergeant company G; Sergeant Buck, to be second sergeant company C; Corporal S. Teal, to be fifth sergeant company C.

Owing to the overcrowded condition of company E it was deemed advisable to form a new uniformed company which was done, the new company, to be G.

Some of these have since been changed.

"And hear at times a sentinel
Who moves about from place to place,
And whispers to the worlds of space,
In the deep night, that all is well.

"And all is well, though faith and form
Be sundered in the night of fear;
Well roars the storm to those that hear
A deeper voice across the storm."

—In Memoriam.

Crossing the Bar.

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

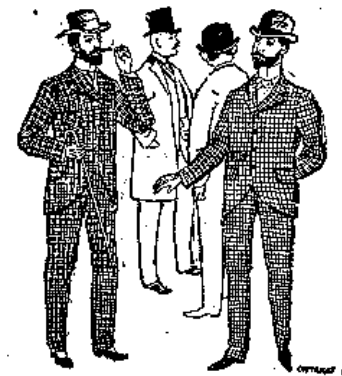

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;

For tho' from out our bourne of time and place

The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar.

—Tennyson.

An Excellent Character

is just as essential to clothes as to their wearer. The character of the clothes made by Alfred Benjamin & Co. is distinct and different from all other makes. Always the latest in designs and of the newest fabrics, and can only be duplicated by one or two of the highest priced tailors. The low and medium priced tailors cannot produce such work as Alfred Benjamin & Company.
