LAST YEAR it was found necessary to request the students who attended program meetings not to interrupt them by leaving the room before they were completed. From present indications it seems that the request ought to be repeated. No entertainment has been given this year, but what some one entered the room after the program had started or left before it had finished.

Any one who cares to attend a meeting at all surely ought to make an effort to get there before it starts, and it is merely showing common politeness to stay until the close of the program.

The only excuse to offer for this habit is that a great many of us can spare time for half a meeting but not for all of it. It would be a good thing if those who have the programs in charge would arrange an intermission of one or two minutes at about the middle of the program; this would do away with all interruptions and would also allow the audience a relaxation from attention to the entertainment.

SHYLOCK.

How shall we portray Shylock in character and in appearance is a question which each one must decide for himself, if he would have in his mind a picture of the most important character in the "Merchant of Venice." In reading over a play for the first time, one generally receives a first impression of a certain character in that play. This clings to one and this one strives to confirm later by a more careful analysis of that character.

After first reading the "Merchant of Venice" and especially the "Trial Scene" we feel infinitely sorry for Shylock, but still we feel that he should have been punished as severely as he was. Then we go back to analyze and to find out why we should feel so. Shylock combined in his nature five prominent characteristics—greed for gain, hatred of the Christians, a desire for revenge, strict justice and love for his daughter.

We can excuse to some extent his love for money inasmuch as wealth was essential to his very existence for that alone insured his safety at a time when the Jews were tolerated for their money alone. But his mercilessness in exacting a high rate of interest and payment which meant ruin to his debtors is not excusable.

His hatred of the Christians is so human that we are more inclined to pity than to condemn him in that respect. He hated them because they had persecuted his race for centuries, and had wounded his pride by spitting on his Jewish gaberdine. Combined with this hatred was contempt for a race which could not understand the taking of interest for money loaned out, and yet ignorantly boasted of their inferiority in business affairs.

Out of this persecution of Shylock grew a desire for revenge in him. This had been growing during his whole life, and a final struggle had to come to show Shylock as well as his persecutors their mistake. The awful means which Shylock took to satisfy this desire sufficiently measure its intensity.

The desire for revenge was a product of Shylock's adherence to strict justice. He would treat others as they had treated him. Had not the Christians persecuted him all his life? Should he not repay them now when a chance was offered? Nobody had shown him mercy. How would it be possible for him to understand the quality of mercy?

In contrast to these qualities of Shylock, his love for his daughter stands out with special significance. We feel that there must have been something good in him, otherwise his love for his daughter would not have been so strong. But Shylock in his desire to guard his daughter, sadly erred by limiting her liberty too narrowly, and when he lost her the desire for revenge became stronger, and fearing that he might yield in the end, he put an oath in heaven to keep his promise.

In this case, where the author gives us no description of the personal appearance of Shylock, we must draw his picture from his character, the time, and the scene of action. Shylock has dark hair and beard slightly mixed with gray. His small black eyes, burning brightly and moving quickly and searchingly, mark the shrewdness of the money-lender. His face is thin and dark, and his mouth is sad but firm. There are lines of care in his forehead, over which the dark mass of hair throws a gloomy shadow.

He is dressed in a long loose cloak of a rich brown material, with collars and cuffs of black velvet. About his waist is tied a rich silk cord and at his neck is a vari-colored silk scarf. Upon his head is a yellow turban, the hated sign of his race.

Then let us picture in our minds Shylock, the money lender, merciless and revengeful, but let us remember also Shylock, the father, cruelly disappointed in her whom he loved so much, his daughter. And let us remember him as one who has suffered all his life from persecution, who now by a bitter lesson has been forced to acknowledge that he was in the wrong and that mercy is higher than justice. Let us, in whom the quality of mercy is inherent, prove it by being merciful in our judgment of him.

A FOREIGNER'S DIFFICULTY.

When the English tongue we speak,
Why is break not rimed with freak?
Will you tell me why it's true
We say sew but likewise few,
And the maker of a verse
Cannot cap his horse with worse?
Beard sounds not the same as heard;
Cord is different from word;
Cow is cow, but low is low;
Shoe is never rimed with foe.
Think of hose and dose and lose,
And of goose and yet of choose.
Think of comb and tomb and bomb,
Doll and roll and home and some.
And since pay is rimed with say,
Why not paid with said, I pray?
We have blood and food and good.
Mould is not pronounced like could.
Wherefore done and gone and lone?
Is there any reason known?
And in short it seems to me

A HALLOWE'EN LARK AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

It was the day before Hallowe'en and some of the boys of the senior class of the High school at O—— had met in the reference room after school to discuss plans for the approaching festival. After a hurried glance about the room, they decided that it was empty and began to talk without restraint. "I'll tell you, boys," said Tom Polk, who was usually the leader of the 'crowd.' There's an old wagon in Mr. Simms' barn, just across the street. Let's take it to pieces, and set it up again on the study platform. I have a key that will fit the side door of the basement and it will be as easy as anything."

All the boys took up the plan with enthusiasm and began to discuss the details of time and place. Just then a boy arose from behind a book case where he had been studying and, with a nod to the group, passed out. "Do you suppose Howells heard all our plans?" said George Fry. "Oh, well, what if he has," replied Polk. "He has been here only this year. He came from the country somewhere, and he won't have spirit enough to pay any attention to it." After a few more words the boys separated with an understanding as to what was expected of each one, on the following evening.

The morning after Hallowe'en the pupils who assembled in the study room for the opening exercise, were astounded at the sight of an old rickety express wagon on the rostrum. The principal, Mr. Pierce, said a few words condemning the act and in the end put the question to the assembled scholars, as to whom had done it. After some moments had passed and no one had responded, he said, "Young men, I am sorry to know that you have so little honor as to deliberately lie about this matter, for that is what your silence amounts to, for I feel sure that this was done by some one in this room. When I find out, as I surely shall, who committed this outrage, he will be suspended for at least two weeks."

The pupils immediately dispersed to their class rooms in a buzz of excitement.

It happened that Sam Polk and George Fry were in the same first period class, but they sat at some distance from each other. In the middle of the period Tom wrote the following note, "Congratulations, old fellow, on our success. Didn't old Pierce get fierce, though? T. P." And when he thought the professor was not looking he threw it to George. It happened, however, that Professor Holmes saw the motion of Tom's arm and immediately called to George.

"Mr. Fry, bring that note to the desk." George, ignorant of what the note contained, brought it to the front and placed it on the desk. The lesson was finished without any comment by the professor, and Tom hoped he either did not understand it or did not care to expose him.

They were vain hopes, for next morning, when the "crowd" had come together in the hall to talk things over Mr. Pierce came out of his office with Claude Howells, and after talking to him for a minute or so, in the hall, he advanced to the group, and asked Tom Polk to step into the office. The boys were thunder-struck. "How could he have learned," came from half a dozen mouths. "I know, fellows," said Fred Hamilton. "It must be that Howells boy. We saw him coming from the office just now and you know he was in the room on Monday and he probably heard all we said." "The cowardly sneak," exclaimed Ralph Conerson. "Let's finish him. He isn't fit to live. He needs a taste of the water cure."

This opinion was enthusiastically endorsed by the boys, and when it was certain that Polk was suspended, they determined on their course of action. Tom was told of the opinion of the boys with regard to Claude Howells, but not of what they intended to do to him, as they thought their proposed hazing might be interfered with. Although Tom knew that it was his own fault, that he had been suspended, he said nothing, feeling that if the boys knew the true state of affairs he would not be considered a martyr and this was now his only consolation.

That evening as Claude Howells was going home from a lecture, with eyes on the ground, and hands in his pockets, he was seized from behind and gagged before he had time to make a sound. A half a dozen young fellows with masks and cloaks jumped upon him, bound his arms and blindfolded him and then carried his limp body swiftly toward the suburbs.

There was, about a quarter of a mile outside the city limits, a small pond, formed by a recent rain. Here they carried him and without any hesitation ducked him in the cold water. Then some one produced a coil of rope and he was securely tied to a tree near by. When this was done the hazers returned to their homes, leaving their captive to free himself as best he could.

During the next two weeks frequent word of what was going on at school was brought to Tom Polk, by his chums, and he was told that Claude Howells had not been at school since he, Tom, had been suspended.

He did not think much of this, supposing that Claude was deeply hurt over his unjust condemnation and was waiting for the sentiment of the school to subside, until, on the Saturday evening before he was to return to school, his mother said to him, "Tom, do you know a boy in your class named Claude Howells?" Taking his sudden attention for assent, she continued. "Mrs. Tyler, one of my friends, told me he was found one evening last week, bound to a tree near the city limits, soaked from head to foot. He was brought home almost exhausted, and has been sick in bed ever since, with a severe cold that almost developed into pneumonia."

"It seems that he came here to school with the hope of winning the Stedman law scholarship, which is offered to your highest ranking senior, and he is nearly heartbroken because of this absence which he fears will cause him to lose the scholarship. His father is poor and could not otherwise send him to law school. Mrs. Tyler says that he cannot imagine what was the reason for his hazing and thinks he must have been mistaken for some one else."

At this point in her story Mrs. Polk was surprised to see Tom jump from his chair, seize his cap and rush out of the door with unusual haste. Later in the evening a group of very penitent boys called on Claude Howells, and made what apologies they could for their actions, and promised him their help in regaining what he had lost in his studies.

* * * *

When at the end of the year it was announced by Mr. Pierce that it gave him great pleasure to say that the Stedman law scholarship was awarded to Mr. Claude Howells, there was no one who clapped a heartier response than a group of seniors, led by Mr. Tom Polk.

A VISIT TO THE WEATHER BUREAU.

In every well regulated nation, among other useful institutions is the weather bureau. In the United States Weather Bureau are scientific instruments of various kinds used in recording weather, atmospheric pressure, and winds. Among the most important of these are the barograph, the barometer, the anemometer, the thermograph, the rain gauge and the sunshine recorder.

The barograph is an automatic recording barometer composed of several anamorphic disks which with the changes of the weight of the atmosphere, move or tip levers which record the movement on a cylinder with a pen. This cylinder has a rotary motion and also moves along the axle, into which a double spiral is cut. The paper on the cylinder is marked off into squares, for ease in reading records.

The Fortin barometer or syphon barometer is another instrument to record atmospheric measure. It consists of a tube filled with mercury which rises and lowers with the atmospheric pressure. This instrument is not mathematically correct, so that allowance is made for temperature, which also acts on mercury. All barometrical readings are reduced to sea level so that they may be compared with those of other cities. Both the barograph and Fortin Barometer record atmospheric pressure.

The anemometer is an electrical instrument which records the velocity and direction of the wind. It consists of four magnetic armatures which connect with levers and these make impressions on a cylinder in much the same way as the barograph. There are four levers, one for each direction and the electrical connection is made every minute by a clock which also turns the cylinder on the other. This instrument is operated by a wind instrument called a wind vane, which makes four electrical connections in a box called the contact-box, in which are five electrodes, one for each direction and one on the shaft of the wind vane to make connections with the anemometer. The anemometer also records sunshine by means of a small instrument called a sunshine recorder. It consists of a tube in which there is a quantity of mercury. One end of this tube is covered with lamp black which turns sunlight into heat. In the middle of the tube are two electrodes, which, when the sun shines and makes the mercury rise, form a complete circuit and a lever makes a record on a cylinder.

A rain gauge is operated in much the same way except that the precipitation is weighed.

The speed of the wind is ascertained by a wheel with several cups arranged around its circumference. The wind turns the wheel and the speed of the wind is found by the speed of the wheel.

The records of all these instruments are taken every morning at eight o'clock, seventy-fifth meridian time; seventy-fifth meridian time, or the time of Washington, is used in all the weather bureaus of the United States so that the records may be uniform.

It is useful to have a weather bureau because people that have perishable products may be warned in-time to protect themselves; ships are warned when not to go to sea; and farmers, merchants, railroads and fruit growers are warned of any sudden changes which might be of any loss to them. Twenty thousand telegrams are sent out every day by the weather bureau and at least fifty thousand small cards telling what the weather will be for the next forty-eight hours.

It costs about one million dollars to support the weather bureau for one year and this expense is paid by the Department of Agriculture. It has been estimated that twenty-five million dollars' worth of perishable products have been saved every year since its introduction, and the amount of products saved is increasing every year.

Strange things have happened, or rather have not happened, in the class of '900; there has not been a single marriage. This class is well organized. They have a reunion every year about Christmas time. At the last reunion A. Smith was elected President, Pauline Adair Vice President and Maud Keys Secretary.

The P. L. S., the girls' society of '00, have had a meeting every summer. Ruth Wilson, who was the President during the senior year, still holds that office.

At a meeting of REGISTER stock holders just before the election of the staff, a very exciting election of stock company officers took place. It was virtually a struggle of factions as there were several distinct parties, each one supporting different candidates. The final result of the election was as follows: President, Frank Creedon; Vice-President, Ralph Hart; Treasurer, Roy Sunderland; Secretary, Hugh Wallace.

Two more sponsors have been chosen, Miss Jessie Willis for Company F, and Miss Adelene Fagan for Company C.

The members of Company E presented their former captain, Mr. William Coryell with a beautiful sword.

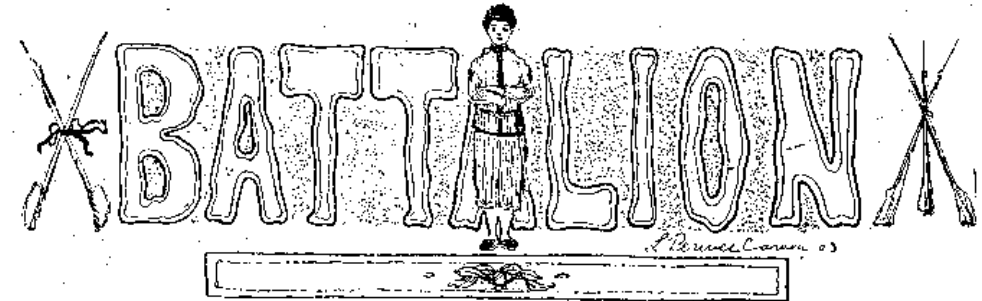

A number of high school friends were entertained very delightfully by Mr. William Christie on last Saturday evening.

The Seniors are longing for the time to come when they can have their first class meeting.

Several of the High School boys are planning to have a Tally-Ho at the Thanksgiving game.

The Clio Society gave a very interesting program last Friday, which was as follows:

Good fortune has smiled upon the Cadet Battalion, in the fact that the weather, with the exception of two or three days, has not been severe enough to cause a suspension of drill out of doors. As a result of this the Freshman cadets have had plenty of opportunity to learn the drill tactics.

Last year on account of the shortage of belts (which went—whither?) the equipments were not worn, this fact detracting much from the military aspect of the battalion. Lt. Qm. Creedon has had them assorted, however, and when the rifles are given out the equipments will also be distributed as far as they will go.

The arms are in excellent condition, having undergone extensive repairs during vacation. New cadets should be warned against handling the rifles roughly as they break very easily at the small of the stock.

The Signal Corps will partly reorganize, as a large number of the men that were enrolled have been transferred back to the companies.

Ralph Hart has been appointed First Lieutenant and Medical Aide of the Hospital Corps. The work for the present term will be, the art of bandaging, the resuscitation of the drowned and first aid to the injured. The corps has had a room in the new building set aside for its use, in which they will pursue their studies and prepare nose ointment and neck liniment preparatory to the encampment of next summer.

The following general order has been published:

Headquarters Corps of Cadets, G. O. No. 5. Nov. 11, '02.

The following promotions and transfers are announced to take effect, this date.

To be Cadet, First Lieutenant and Medical Aide, Cadet Hospital Steward, R. Hart; to be Cadet Hospital Steward, Cadet Sergeant, H. Blackburn, vice Hart, promoted; to be cadet First Assistant Hospital Steward; Cadet Private, Henry Johnson, vice Blackburn, promoted; to be Prin. Mus., Cadet Private M. Lowell, vice Mace, resigned.

Cadet Corp. A. Lee is hereby transferred from D Company to C Company, vice Brome, resigned. To be Cadet, Corporal D Company, Private W. Samuelson, vice Lee, transferred.

The following cadets are transferred from the Signal Corps:

H. Grossman to Co. A, C. Schoessler to Co. A, F. Perkins to Co. A, H. Stewart to Co. A, F. Stearns to Co. A, H. Barnard to Co. D, F. Bowman to Co. D, R. Beals to Co. D.

H. Stewart and F. Stearns are hereby detailed to the Hospital Corps. The following cadets are transferred to the Signal Corps: O. Cole, Co. A; A. Rasmussen, Co. A; A. Chambers, Co. B; P. McPherson, Co. D; A. Peterson, Co. E; G. Boyd, Co. E; G. Pixley, Co. E. Sherman, Co. E; W. Johnson, Co. E; R. Hammond, Co. F; Wilburt, Co. F; C. Conrad, Co. F.

Hereafter any cadet absent from drill unless he files an excuse before assembly, will receive five demerits.

R. HOMAN,
Com. of Cadets.

A. HARD LUCK STORY.

Once there was a football team which belonged to a high school in the state of Nebraska. It was a good team and they had a good captain and a fine coach, but luck was certainly against them.

At the first of the year they showed up well and worked hard. Pretty soon a couple of their "old men," whom they were depending on, quit the game and another left school. This left them nearly all new men, but they got a team together and played some games with other schools. They won some of the games and lost some more.

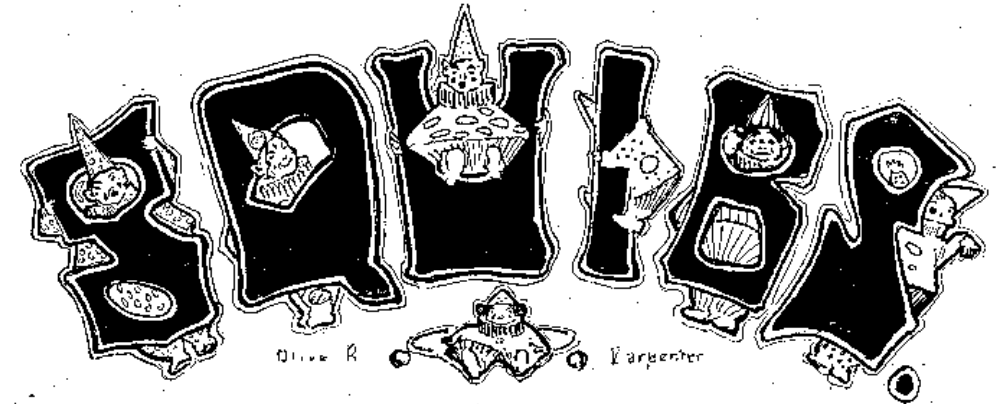

Then it came time for the championship game. This was the hardest game of the season and the team felt that it would be close. To tell the truth (this is a true story), they were beaten, but they played a nifty game and every one said they were "all right," so they didn't care—much. Then they played another game with a large and heavy team from a small college near by. Of course the big team beat them because they were much heavier but the team was "game" and stuck to it.

Now, they are again practicing daily and expect to play some more games soon, but also expect to win them. Hurrah for the team. H. E. W., '03.

The sight of the apparatus in the gymnasium has filled the girls with a new interest and all are anxious to see it in place and ready to be used. The apparatus received consists of parallel bars, a spring board, a jumping board, travelling rings, flying rings, a basket ball outfit, ropes poles and mattresses, besides other apparatus for recreative work.

 "I looked it over."
 "I thought you overlooked it."

John Wanamaker began life without a dollar in his pocket. So did the Register. Come on with your Cabinet Portfolio.

Lieutenant Devalon—"Did you ever smell powder?"
 Captain Harris—"No, but I tasted it."

Other good names for a "Frat."
 "Eata Bitā Pie."
 "Shoota Gama Kraps."
 "Coppa Apple Pie."

Spike Kennard was seen one day last week climbing a step ladder in search of his necktie. Sad to say, he could not find it.—Ex.

Freshie (who has lost a book)—"Is this the place where you recover books?"
 Miss Nellie Fay—"No, you have to have them bound yourself."

The only original O. H. S. fraternity, the War Department Munchers—"It costs nothing to join, but one must possess great physical endurance.

Man. Train—Dent at first did haste,
 And tried to "cast his cast,"
 But he has "learnt" at last
 That hurry's always waste.

Teacher of German (to C. Van K.)—"Translate, 'Die Flusse Russland's sind gross.'"

C. Van K.—"The feet of the Russians are large."

Teacher (on Washington's birthday)—"Did you ever know any boy who never told a lie?"

Small Boy—"Yes, one, he was a dumb boy, though."

Is her gone? Has she went?
 Is she left I all alone?
 Us can never get to she;
 Her can always come to me,
 It cannot was—ah, me!

There are many things in this wide world
 'Tis better not to know.
 And that is why, oh, teacher, dear,
 Our lessons suffer so.

To the Lunch Counter.

The blue fly never plays baseball,
 Nor votes, nor seeks undying fame;
 He has no business in the soup,
 But he gets there just the same.

Teacher—"Mamie, they used to tell me, when I was a little girl that if I didn't let coffee along it would make me foolish."

Mamie—"Well, why didn't you?"

There was a young captain named Fair—
 For the girls he did not care.
 But one night, sad to say,
 His heart flew away
 To a girl with blue eyes and light hair.

(Fanny Holland rushing down the hall, with her locker key in her mouth.)
 Laura Dale—"Hey there, Fan, take that key out of your mouth or the first thing you know you will have the lockjaw."

Teacher (after a discussion of the various fruits and what products are made of them)—"And pears, what can be made of them?"

Eager Freshman—"Soap, Pears' Soap."

Little Willie (to Ralph W., calling on "——")—"You can't guess what I've got in my pocket, Mr. W."

W.—"No, I can't. What is it, Willie?"
 Willie—"It's beans. Ma said you didn't know beans, but I thought I'd try you."

Houbigonts Ideal Perfume, the New Paris rage. You will like it, Beaton-McGinn Drug Co.

"Buttons," the editor—"I made $2 this morning."

Chaffee—"Where did you make the raise; did Reading go up?"

"Buttons"—Not exactly. Mac asked me to lend him that amount and I did not happen to have it."

Miss Valentine—"Give a sentence, please."

Pupil—"She said, 'My father whipped me till he was out of breath.'"

Miss Valentine—"Where will you put quotation marks?"

Pupil—"Around where my father whipped me."

The biology students were studying grasshoppers and the following conversation took place:

Hart—"Is that large one a grasshopper, too?"

Teacher—"Yes, what did you think it was?"

Hart—"A clod hopper."

Say, girls, have you tried Asparox, the new hot drink? Beaton-McGinn Drug Co.

Greek History Teacher—"Johnnie, can you prove that the Spartans had grit?"

Johnnie—"Yes, ma'am, the book says, 'A Spartan boy, having stolen a young fox and concealed him under his garment, allowed the creature to tear out his victuals with his teeth and claws.'" —Cicero.

"If you were king," Ah! Stan. "If you were king,"

I rather guess you wouldn't do a thing.
 Aye, not a thing.

Free bowling alleys built alone for you.
 Aside from pleasure not a thing to do.
 And sweethearts all around. Ah, me, what bliss.

Oh, Rosey, what could be as fine as this—
 "If you were king."

Blessings on thee, little man,
 Verdant boy with cheeks of tan.

With thy patched pantaloons,
 Worn for many, many moons;
 With thy greenness and thy gall.
 With thy crudeness—plain to all—
 Thou art but a freshman now.

To upper classmen thou must bow,
 But despite thy lowly name,
 Thou wilt get there just the same.—Ex.

Tim Murphy, the popular comedian, saw an old colored woman sitting under an awning fanning herself when he was in Washington, D. C., last summer.

"It's dreadfully hot, isn't it, mammy?" asked Mr. Murphy.

"Deed it is, chile," said the old woman; "deed it is. 'T ain't right for it to be so hot this-a-way. I tell you, forty years ago, when the blessed Lawd made the weather, we didn't have these stewin' days, honey; no, 'deed, we didn't. But now these biggety men up at the Weather Office has the makin' of the weather, they does send us anything they please, and they ain't skillful, chile; they ain't skillful."—Little Chronicle.

Why yes, Beaton-McGinn Drug Co. sells Lowney's candies. Girls, tell the boys about it.

"What does this nation need?" shouted the impassioned orator. "What does this nation require, if she steps proudly across the Pacific, if she strides boldly across the mighty ocean in her march of trade and freedom? I repeat, what does she need?"

"Rubber boots," suggested the grossly materialistic person in a rear seat.—Ex.

Fuddy: "Honestly, now, what kind of weather do you like best?"

Duddy: "That is a subject that has bothered me a great deal. On mature reflection, I think the weather I like best is the weather we are not having at the time."—Ex.

Exchanges

The REGISTER has received a number of good exchanges since the opening of school, but on account of the delay in the election of the staff we have been unable to acknowledge any of them in past numbers.

The "Character Sketch" of William Jennings Bryan in the College Cosmos is interesting.

The cuts heading the various departments in The Tech are worthy of praise.

The Girls' Department of The Helios contains an interesting story entitled "A Night's Adventure."

We enjoyed reading the stories in The Monthly Maroon.

The Student has offered prizes for the best stories on some given subjects so that we may expect some fine literature in the near future.

Three's a crowd, and there were three,
The girl, the parlor lamp and he;
Two's company and no doubt
That's why the parlor lamp went out.

The Strain on Women's Eyes

Women's eyes get their worst strain when they are least able to stand it—after the day of work and worry, when every sense is jaded and the vitality at its lowest point.

A pair of "rest glasses" will help the tired eyes stand the strain and prevent actual disease.

The class spirit shown in The High School Voice is worthy of praise.

The Record and The Opinion both have their exchange editors, but no exchange column. Why is it?

The Recorder is a neat, well written paper, and we agree with them in regard to the material for the exchange column.

"What makes such a bad smell about the postoffice?" asked one gentleman of another.

"I know, pa," interrupted little Johnny.

"Why, my son?"

"Why, it's the dead letters."—Exchange.

The High School Sentiment is a neat and well arranged paper. We wish it success in the future.

There is an enthusiastic spirit shown for athletics in The Black and Red.

The short story entitled "My Search for an Idea," in the Wyoming Student is quite true to life and we may some of us be forced to follow the author's example should we ever find ourselves in that predicament.

The flexibility of the English language is shown in the reply of an Irishman to a man who sought refuge in his shanty in a heavy shower, and finding it about as wet inside as out, said, "You have quite a pond on the floor."

"Yis, shure we have a great lake in the roof."—Editor's Drawer in Harper's Magazine.
