Editorial.

WITH this edition the Register subscriptions end for the year. It is customary to use the June edition for programs at the theatre on commencement night. Besides the commencement exercises it will contain a classified list of all the pupils in the High School, a general summary of the year's work, a message from Mr. Waterhouse and at least some, if not all of the orations of the graduates. It will be a nice souvenir of the school year just ending and a list will be sent around later enabling those who care to do so, to order copies at a nominal price which will be decided on later.

IF ALL the statements made in the daily papers about the different candidates for mayor in the recent local election were true(?) it wouldn't make much difference to the goodly people of Omaha who got elected. There wouldn't be much choice in rotten apples.

THE time is drawing near when the annual Register election will be held and the paper will pass into the hands of new management for the coming year. The Register has been a financial success under the present system and it would have been more successful in other ways if it had received better support from the school at large. It has been almost impossible to get literary contributions, and out of the large number of pupils in the High School there is no where near the number of subscribers that there should be. In a large school like this, where there is only one representative paper to support, every pupil in the school should be a subscriber. Again, there are comparatively few pupils who are stock holders in the Register stock company. This is something that every one should support because although the shares are twenty-five cents each, they can be sold at par when the owner leaves school—so it virtually costs nothing.

ing to be a stockholder. There is still time enough to take this up—the Register election will take place in a few weeks and every one should have at least one vote in deciding who shall manage the Register next year. Everybody turn out—be loyal—and buy stock as if it were tickets to a hop.

THE officers and men of the High School cadet battalion wish to extend their sincere thanks to the merchants of Omaha for the hearty support given by them to the encampment fund.

CADETS going to camp for the first time usually make the mistake of not taking enough bedding. At this time of the year it gets very cold before morning in the open air and cadets should make it a point to take enough blankets with them to keep warm.

The Shade of Loudown.

On a trip across the Atlantic on the Celtic I heard several passengers conversing in the smoking room. Interest in cards had lagged, so to while away the time members of the group told stories, the themes of which dealt of mysterious occurrences. Finally it came the turn of a well dressed young fellow to speak and he related the following:

"The twenty-third of August will always be remembered in our family. It was on that day a few years ago that my father's long cherished ambition was realized. For years—indeed, ever since he visited Scotland in his boyhood—he had looked forward and longed for the time when he could return wealthy enough to purchase his ancestral home and settle there for the remainder of his life. Not to weary you with a long family genealogy, it is sufficient for me to say that my great grandfather, being a younger son, left England and settled in America, where my father and I were born and reared. In the days not very long ago, when my father was a struggling merchant in Baltimore, he often discussed the idea of regaining his castle by some means or another, although none of our family ever thought that his schemes would amount to any more than a castle in Spain. But suddenly the unexpected happened, the reigning earl and his only heir were drowned while yachting, and my father was found to be the nearest kin, so he was made the earl of Loudown. Of course you now understand that I am the son of Walter Campbell and refer to his possessions in Ayrshire, Scotland.

"But to the ghost. After we took possession of the manor we were assigned to our apartments. The one I took consisted of a large tower, somewhat older than the rest of the castle. Entrance to it was by means of a short corridor from the main hall. This communicated with a good sized room over the old moat; this room I used for my parlor and library. A stone staircase led to my sitting room just above, while a third flight led to my bed room. If one wished, he might ascend again and find himself on the battlements. The windows were all high and narrow with stone casements two or three feet wide, too narrow to enable a man to pass through them. The passage on the main floor was the only means of entrance or of exit. All the furnishings were rich and massive, relics of by-gone years.

For several days under the guidance of an old retainer I amused myself in looking at the many portraits and curios with which the house was filled. He told me the history and legends of the castle, and of the pictures that hung on the walls. One painting had a great fascination for me, it was that of my father's great-great-great-great-grandfather, a resolute, dashing fellow, in a brilliant scarlet coat with huge epaulets and many gold buttons. The face and figure were remarkably life like, and stood out in contrast to the dark, time-stained panels and dim canvasses. In a voice filled with awe the old man said it was a painting of earl John, who had committed suicide when his command of the British forces in America was revoked in 1782. He also assured me that his spirit haunted the place and warned the occupants of danger. Indeed, he said, the late laird had seen him stalking about his bed room the night before he left for his last sail. By a strange coincidence, the family all declared I resembled the portrait, though in just what manner they did not agree, and the butler told me that I was occupying earl John's apartments. However, I did not believe these ghost tales, and continued to sleep unmolested.

But one night—the anniversary of Earl John's death—I awoke in the middle of the night, trembling and perspiring greatly. The silence was oppressive, and I lay with every nerve alert for some sound, I knew not what.

Just then I distinctly heard the clock which stood opposite the bed strike three. This clock was made in the seventeenth century, and no longer ran—how then could it strike? Worse than that, the heavy curtains of my bed were being slowly pulled back by some unseen agent. I am not a coward, but I was really frightened, so much so that my heart seemed to stop beating and I could not breathe when I beheld before my bed an indistinct figure in the moonlight. It was the figure of a man. The hair was bloody and matted. The face deathly white, the eyes only empty sockets, the chin hanging on the breast. It wore no coat and the white waist was torn and covered in places with clay. The trousers were military and were incased in black boots which were also dirty. It was the spirit of Earl John. Slowly it withdrew toward the east wall, its empty scabbard which hung at the belt clanking at every step. With every muscle in my body resisting I rose from bed and followed. Resistance was impossible, a force like a magnet drew me on. The apparition disappeared through the wall and still I came after, for I knew it awaited me on the other side. Instinctively I pressed a panel in the wall and a hidden door opened, disclosing a flight of stone stairs with the now luminous apparition at the bottom, beckoning me on. Again I tried to stop, to go back, but impossible, I could only go forward. Down, down we went. Then on the level, then turning again, he leading and I fearfully following. Through dungeons, cells, corridors and secret doors we crept. At times I heard a roaring above my head, a murmur of voices, and a confused shouting, but nothing distinct.

Ever before me was my awful guide, beckoning me on. Finally we reach the open air under the roots of a mighty yew tree. Here my guide faded away, and as he vanished I sank to the ground, insensible.

When I regained my senses I found myself in the arms of mother, who was bathing my face with cold water. It was nearly morning; to my great surprise I learned that the castle had caught fire during the night and the wing in which my tower was situated had been entirely consumed. When the fire was discovered they had tried to get me out, but the corridor which connected my rooms with the rest of the castle was so full of fire and smoke that they were unable to enter and had given me up for lost. I had only been found outside by accident.

At first the family refused to credit the story of my escape, but after the entrance to the subterranean passage was discovered they were inclined to give it more credence. There is another curious fact in regard to this case. The under gardner, being employed near the family vault, discovered that the heavy slab which covered Earl John's grave was torn into two large pieces. This he solemnly swears was not the case a week before the fire.

You may or may not credit this adventure; however, I never can forget it and shall always believe that my life was saved through the interest and protection of my ancestor, who rose from the grave to warn me and lead me to safety."

The Shadow of a Tragedy.

(A true Vassar story).

"Girls! Girls!" cried Alice Blanchard, bursting into a room where a number of her friends were congregated, "what do you think?"

"I don't think, but I can guess," said Carriebell Willey, lazily, while she bit into another cracker.

"Well! I can't wait for you to guess so I might as well tell you. I can not find my watch. I put it in the right hand bureau drawer last night and as I haven't been out since, I do not see what could have become of it." And Alice just sat down and cried. "You know," she continued, "it was just a beauty and it was the last present father gave me before he died."

During this burst the girls' expressions changed from happiness to sorrow. They all felt a kind of parental love for Alice because her father had just died and as she had not had a mother for eighteen years it had gone pretty hard with her. It did seem as though Alice had been born under an unlucky star anyway, for she lost more stickpins and change than any other girl on that corridor.

After a short pause in which nothing could be heard but Alice's sobs, Onetah Dale kissed her and said, "There, there, the idea of thinking you will never find it again just because you have misplaced it."

"But I have hunted high and low," and Alice looked up with such a woe begone expression that the girls could hardly keep from smiling.

"Well, I guess we will have to tell Miss Ritter," said Rosa Cole, "and ask her what to do. You know a good many things have mysteriously disappeared lately. Although I didn't intend to tell you girls about this, now that we are on the subject I might as well say that I have not been able to find my diamond ring since last Tuesday night."

"You, poor dear!" exclaimed Alice, who had almost forgotten her own sorrow in her friend's misfortune, "here I am, snivelling around here over a loss no greater than yours. I'll go down right away and tell our troubles to our policeman."

That evening a meeting of the corridor teachers was called and the topic of the theft was thoroughly discussed. It was decided that a pocket-book, containing about five dollars, should be placed on the table at the foot of the stairs and a watch stationed near it to see who took it.

A few mornings after that the same girls who had been in Rosella's room on that memorable morning were enjoying fudge in Onetah's room. They discussed everything that came into their heads and at last they fell back on the familiar topic, the stealing.

"Lolla and I just cry every night," began Alice, "for we fear we will never see the ring and watch again. We are—"

A gentle tap was heard at the door and at Onetah's summons the door opened and Miss Ritter, the corridor teacher, stood in the doorway.

"I don't like to break up this family circle," she said, "but I came to tell Frances that her father is coming this noon and as they might want to eat lunch alone I would like to see her about it."

"Isn't that just fine, girls?" and Frances, jumping up, clapped her hands. "Don't expect to see me for the rest of the morning," she called back over her shoulder, as she and Miss Ritter left the room.

The girls were almost as excited over the coming of Mr. Bird as Frances was. They all expressed their desire to see their parents, except Alice, who was always quiet when the girls spoke about home.

Lunch hour came and was gone and as Onetah passed Frances' room door, she softly knocked. A low murmur was heard from within and at last Onetah, thinking her friend was playing some prank on her, opened the door unbidden. The scene that she saw was so much different from the one she expected to see that she drew back in amazement. In the farther corner of the room were two men conversing in low tones. One held a small vial. On the bed was the figure of a girl but her face was so distorted that Onetah did not recognize her as being Frances. A man was kneeling beside the bed, holding the girl's hands and his face was hidden in the folds of her dress. Seeing a note on the table beside her, Onetah tore it open. It read thus:

My Dearest Friend:—

I could not stand it any longer. Please return the things in my desk drawer to their right owners.

Her Awakening.

F. H. '04.

"Oh! I must wear this old pink dress again. It's a shame. All the other girls will have nice new dresses, but I must wear this same old thing. I do wish mamma were a little more thoughtful of me."

Georgiana gave a deep sigh as she laid out her party dress. It was true, she had worn it at several of the University dances but what difference did her dress make, she always had a good time. Georgiana had been at the University almost a year now, being one of the gayest and most popular girls of the Helta Gams.

As she was pouting about her dress, several girls rushed into the room, exclaiming, "Georgie, aren't you ready yet. Chester's down stairs waiting for you. Do hurry!"

With the assistance of the girls Georgiana quickly made her toilet, while they confided in each other their monthly averages. Ethel, Georgiana's chum, broached the subject by saying "Do you know, Georgie, I got above 90 per cent in three exams? I haven't received my French paper, but I think I got about 95 in that. How did you fare?"

The two girls were very fond of each other, though Georgiana often accused Ethel of being "goody-good" because she spent a great deal of her time studying.

"Oh, I've got all my exam. papers," said Georgiana carelessly, "flunked in two and just got through in the others."

By this time she was dressed, and with a last glance at the mirror she hurried down stairs. "How are you, Chester? I've been wanting to see you so badly. When did you get back? Did you see any of my friends?"

Chester smiled at the confusion of her questions, but did not answer them until the carriage door closed behind them. "One at a time, please. I returned yesterday and have been very anxious to see you, too. Had a glorious time while I was home. I met your brother last week at Marjorie's cotillion and he wanted to know all about you. He asked me if you were studying hard and getting good marks. I told him you were doing fine and—to be serious—I wish it were the truth. I hate to see anyone wasting time here flunking month after month. I know you can do better if you try a little, because you did at High."

She did not answer him but he noticed as they ascended the stairs to the dance hall that she was disturbed. After they entered the dance hall Georgiana was herself again, nodding to the girls and smiling to the boys. Yet she felt hurt that Chester, her old friend, should go so far as to tell her she ought to spend more time studying. But it took more than a mere reproof to mar her enjoyment and no one entered with more zest into the evening's pleasure than thoughtless, frivolous Georgiana. And yet, behind the thoughtless, frivolous manner, Georgiana had, as Chester recognized, a high and noble character which only needed an awakening to assert itself.

* * * * *

In a small cottage on the suburbs of Winchester a middle-aged woman sank into a chair with sheer exhaustion. Unconsciously she gave a low moan as she took several pieces from her workbasket and began to sew. Her husband sat opposite her reading the paper, glancing up now and then with a worried look at his wife.

"I must finish this silk waist before morning," said Mrs. Rustin, "because Georgie wrote today that she had to have something decent, as she styles it, to wear Saturday and here it is Thursday."

Mr. Rustin suddenly put down his paper saying, "Mary, I don't know what I am going to do. I received a letter again from Georgiana today asking for more money. I'm sure I don't know what she does with all I send her. I haven't paid last month's rent yet and still she wants more money to spend nonsensically. She ought to be at home where she belongs."

Mrs. Rustin said nothing for a few moments, but tears came into her eyes as she answered, "No, Jim, don't send for her. I'll manage to make some money on my preserves this week and I'll send her money. I don't want to deprive her of her education."

As time went on matters grew worse and worse. Mr. Rustin declared that he could not afford to keep the cottage which they were now living in but they must move into a cheaper one. Mrs. Rustin had been growing weak and ill for some time but would not give up. About a year after she was forced to succumb to her nervous condition and the doctors pronounced her "dangerously ill." Georgiana was sent for.

She came the next day and saw the worried look of her father and pale face of her brother. She stopped the doctor as he was leaving the house.

"Oh, doctor, do tell me the truth. What is the matter with mother?"

The doctor hesitated a moment, then said, "Well, I think you have as much right to know as anybody. It's a serious case of nervous prostration. You see it this way: Your mother has been worrying herself to death and working too hard. She needs at least six months of perfect rest and quiet."

Georgiana turned pale and trembled visibly as she heard the doctor's verdict, but there was no time now for hesitation; there was too much to be done. It was a very hard trial for Georgiana during the next year. Her mother ill, her three little brothers to take care of besides all the cooking and housework. Many an evening she spent crying over the burned biscuits or salted potatoes which her family was compelled to eat. Nor was it a seldom occurrence that one of her little brothers came lispng to his sister asking her to darn a tattered old stocking or mend a torn waist. But poor Georgiana knew nothing of practical work. She reproached herself severely to think that she had been so thoughtless and frivolous all these years, and not only her ignorance of practical work troubled her but her conscience also pricked her. Often she could be heard murmuring to herself, "How horribly thoughtless I've been all this time. I never once thought of mamma and the children while I was away at school and what did I learn there? Yes, they tell me I'm a good dancer. But I do wish I knew something worth knowing."

Thus Georgiana worked through many long months, and by the time Mrs. Rustin was able to be around again she was most pleasantly surprised to find the house very neat and clean. Will she ever forget that dinner she ate, the first evening the family were all together again? She declared she had never tasted such light bread, or such delicious cake.

As the family were enjoying the meal, Chester, who said he just happened to be that way, stopped in. Georgiana was delighted to see him, though he expected cold reception from her, considering their parting about a year before.

And how surprised he was to find Georgiana had become such an adept at cooking and housekeeping. Georgiana said that was partly due to him.

"Really, Chester, I never realized how much time I had been wasting at the Uni. until you told me that evening you took me to the Officers. You gave me the right sense of duty. I remember it so plainly; I always will be indebted to you for that kind act."

And Chester himself in after years reaped the harvest of her awakening.

Drama and Music

HELEN BUCKINGHAM—FLOISE WOOD

P. G. S.

A remarkable amount of talent was displayed in the play given by the P. G. S., Friday, May 15. The quaint costumes and the stage settings were very artistic. Miss Howe took the part of Miss Jenkyns admirably while Miss Bunker as Lady Glenmire was excellent hit. Miss Carson carried off the honors of the afternoon. She is very clever and her absolute lack of self-consciousness made her performance the more pleasing. It was a good program and every one seemed to enjoy it.

LATIN PLAY.

The program given by the Latin students was excellent. The scene from Aeneid Book IV, by Miss Hall, Mr. Higgins and Mr. Schneider, was very fine, also the scene from "Vestal Virgins." The selection from Cicero by Mr. Ladd was very interesting but the number which seemed to afford the most amusement was the Roman school.

Mr. Sunderland as magister and all the members of the school were very good, besides being very amusing. It was a good program and enough money was certainly made to defray expenses.

VERSALZEN!

Am Freitag Nachmittag, d. 24. April, etwas nach zwei Uhr, wurden die Thüren des grossen Studien-Zimmers den Schuelern der Hochschule geoeffnet. Es wurden keine Billette verkauft und Eintritt war nur durch Einladung zu erlangen. In jedem Sitz sassen zwei und auch drei und andere standen rings im Zimmer umher.

Die Buehne war sehr geschmackvoll dekorirt mit Portieren, Gardinen, Teppichen, etc.

Die Heldin, Frl. A. Bourke, spielte ihre Rolle mit ausserordentlich vielem Gefuehl und Talent. Hoffentlich werden wir von ihr bald wieder hoeren.

Es war die ausgesprochene Meinung aller, dass Herr Sutphen einen ausgezeichneten Liebhaber machte.

Das Spiel war durch und durch humoristisch und ohne Zweifel haben sich alle grossartig amuesirt.

Unter Leitung von Frl. F. McHugh und Frl. Rockfellow hat die Browning Gesellschaft lobenswerthe Arbeit waehrend des Winters geleistet. Alle wuenschen der Browning Gesellschaft eine glueckliche Zukunft.

A. C. S.

The program given under the auspices of the Alice Cary was a great success. The contributors to this program were nearly all people from outside the school but the interest they seem to take in the High school is very pleasing.

BROWNING SOCIETY.

A very graceful prelude to the German play given under the auspices of The Browning Society was a piano solo by Miss Towne and a song by Miss Teetzal. They were thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated by all.

A. C. S. PROGRAM.

Oh, but aren't we proud of our Alice Carey Society though? The program given in 204 on May 1 was surely a credit to the school as well as to the society. The effort spent upon it was not in vain and every one present appreciated the talents and excellent work of those on the program.

The musical numbers on the program were vocal solos by Misses Hall, Peck and Hoagland, piano solo by Madame Borglum and Miss Towne, and a violin solo by Prof. Baetens.

LATIN PROGRAM.

The program given by the Latin department, May 8, was begun with a piano solo, The Sonata Symphonique, by Beethoven, beautifully rendered by Miss Ingrid Peterson. She has a great deal of talent and played her selection with exceptional technique.

When the curtain went up for the first time a rather unique sight was revealed—a chorus of singers in Roman attire. They sang a chant from "Aeneid," their accompanist being Miss Sadelik. The chorus later sang two more songs, "Laurigee Horatius," and "Integer Vitae" and showed care and training. Misses Anna Bourke, Mary Cusack and Elizabeth Congdon sang a trio, "Awake, Aurora, Awake." Once again we missed that new piano.

P. G. S. PLAY.

There were some very interesting musical numbers given with the P. G. S. play. A piano solo, "Berceuse," by Chopin, by Miss Peterson and two numbers by the violin quartette.

Battalion.

Camp! The day dream, the night dream, and the pipe dream, of the freshmen cadets.

It is not yet definitely decided upon what day the cadets will leave for camp, but they will go out about the eleventh of June.

Camp this year will be at Auburn, Nebraska, a town about seventy-five miles south of Omaha. The Missouri Pacific railroad has made special rates for the cadets, charging only one dollar a round trip for each man.

The Cadet Officers' Club has selected two hustling committees who will canvass most of the town, one taking the wholesale and the other the retail district. The committee will receive donations of either money or provisions. The citizens of Auburn have contributed liberally toward the encampment at that place and we feel that the business men of Omaha will not be backward in doing their share.

This year each cadet will be asked to pay one dollar toward the general expenses. With this money it will be possible to have an increased number of cooks and better food than was served to us last year.

The encampment will be under the direct supervision of Commandant Wasells, and, needless to say, strict military discipline will be observed. We will have, as usual, a visitor's day, upon which our "mamas" and "sweethearts" will be allowed the freedom of the camp and the privilege of bestowing upon their starving (?) dear ones pis'n' things innumerable.

The appearance of the battalion is very much improved since the distribution of the new equipments. About one hundred and seventy-five new guns have been received, along with enough bayonets and cartridge boxes to supply the deficiency. The belts of white webbing, which were also served out, give the cadets a very soldier-like appearance, contrasting nicely with the gray uniforms.

There has been no guard mounting for the past two weeks, but instead the cadets are being drilled regularly in the manual of arms.

Society.

In honor of the class of 1903 the Alumni Association will give a banquet some time in June. Arrangements are being made for the accommodation of a large crowd. Allan B. Hamilton is chairman and will be glad to furnish any information.

Miss Nona Townsend, sponsor to the Hospital corps, entertained the captains and sponsors very delightfully Friday evening, May 22. The rooms were beautifully decorated with flowers and red cross pennants, which were presented to the guests on leaving. A most enjoyable evening was spent.

The Dickens' club members entertained themselves in a most unique manner Friday evening, April 17, at the home of Miss Ellen True. The society was organized last fall by a number of junior and senior girls for the purpose of studying Dickens' works. Miss F. McHugh was chosen leader of the society. Friday evening each girl impersonated some character in one of Dickens' works. The boys who were invited were Dickens' characters and a most delightful evening was spent in playing games. Later in the evening elaborate refreshments were served.

Miss Edna and Eloise Hillis were hostesses at a meeting of the Q. Q. Q. Saturday, April 11.

Miss Edith Sanborn entertained the Browning society Saturday, April 18.

Miss Bernice Carson entertained Company E, of which she is sponsor, very delightfully at her home, Friday evening, April 24.

Miss Mildred Serviss entertained the members of Hawthorne society very delightfully, Saturday April 25.

The musical given Friday afternoon May 1 under the auspices of the A. C. S. society was the only one of its kind ever given at the High School. Prominent professionals of the city kindly rendered selections and a large crowd attended. The platform was beautifully decorated with white bunting and yellow chrisanthemums, the society colors. The program was a great success financially also, and a statue will be presented to the High School by the Alice Carey society in the near future.

On Friday afternoon, May 8, the Latin department of the High School presented a very unique entertainment. The following is the program:

Piano Solo.....Ingrid Peterson
Chant from opening lines of

"Aeneid".....Latin Chorus
Scene from "Aeneid," Book VI,.....

May Hall, Leslie Higgins and Clarence Schneider.

Dialogue from "Caesar" Book I (Latin)
Herold Thorne and Carl Van Sant.

Song—"Laurigle Horatius"...Chorus.
An Original Poem (doggeral).....

Bryon Eaton
Scene from "Vestal Virgins."

Song—"Integer Vitae".....Chorus
Debate—"Resolved that Caesar had a more admirable character than Cicero," Lyman Brysen, affirmative; Hugh Robertson, negative, victorious.

Song—"Awake, Aurora, Awake,"....
Anna Bourke, Mary Cusack, Beth Congdon.

The Alpha Omicron Frat. gave their May party Friday evening, May 1. A good crowd was there and all seemed to spend a most pleasant evening.

Company D gave a party Saturday evening May 9. A very delightful evening was spent in various pastimes.

Nearly all the sponsors have presented their guilds to the companies.

The third senior social will be given the latter part of May.

The P. G. S. play—"Cranford" was very fine and was a treat to those who saw it. Following is the cast of characters of the play: Miss Matilda Jenkins, Alice Howe; Miss Betty Barker, Ora Ogle; Mrs. Fitz Adams, Olive Carpenter; The Hon. Mrs. Jamieson, May Hall; Mary Smith, Louise Parmelee; Mrs. Forrester; Blanche Whitlock; Martha, Edna Sweely; Miss Pole, Bernice Carson; Peter, Roy Sunderland.

The senior class held an important business meeting Wednesday afternoon, May 13. It was decided that no special class day exercises would be held this year, but some exercises will be given at the senior banquet, to be held a few days before graduation. Rev. Smith was chosen to give the baccalaureate sermon.

Athletics.

The Gym classes will have their exhibition Friday, May 22. This is the great gala day for this department. The morning classes are arranged to give their entertainment together from 10:30 to 12 and all the afternoon classes combined for 5th and 6th hours. Each student is to invite her parents to see the progress of work in the development. The next exhibition will consist of free hand work, the Swedish system being used, elementary work and apparatus, vaults on horse with and without spring board, parallel bars and flying rings, finishing with dumb-bell drills. The girls show a great deal of enthusiasm and take great interest in their work. The regular class work will not close for several weeks and after that the physical exams. are taken.

"Those who came to laugh remained to—root." When I predicted a winning baseball team for us this year, the long guffaws were all the encouragement that I received. Now I am happy as our boys, in that terrific fourteen inning struggle at Lincoln, won the championship of Nebraska which, added to their previous laurels, makes them champions of three states, Nebraska, Iowa, and South Dakota. What more can we wish for?

Added to this we have won the first athletic event on Lincoln's grounds that has come to Omaha for six years. Here is how it happened:

Lincoln, Nebr., May 16.

In a wonderful fourteen inning pitcher's battle here today, Omaha High school defeated Lincoln High by a score of 4 to 1, for the State championship. Lowell gave the best exhibition of the pitchers art ever seen in Lincoln, allowing but one hit in the last twelve innings, and striking out fifteen. The infield work of the Omaha team, Blake's pitching and Robertson's batting were the other features.

Sacrifice hits—Brome. Two base hits—Robertson (2), Home run—Rankin. Stolen bases—Fairbrother (2). Batteries—Lowell and Fairbrother, Blake and Sequin.

Le Mars, Iowa, May 8.

Omaha High school defeated Le Mars High school for the championship of South Dakota and Iowa. Fairbrother's batting and Omaha's brilliant team work were the features. Le Mars could do absolutely nothing with Omaha's pitcher, who allowed but three hits and no walks. The game should have been a shut out.

 Batteries—Greenleaf and Fairbrother, Honnold and Kistle. Umpire—Black.

On Saturday, May 9, the Dundee town team fell easy victims to Lowell's staunch arm and High school bats. The game was a walkaway. Brome played his usual brilliant game.

Springfield, Nebr., April 25.

The semi-professionals of this town defeated Omaha High school today through bases on balls and infield weakness. Fairbrother split his finger in the second and had to retire.

Down at Bellevue on April 18 a putrid umpire succeeded in robbing Omaha of the game through his rank decision. Called a foul ball fair, which allowed four runs.

The Omaha boys wish to publicly thank the Le Mars High school base ball team for the gentlemanly treatment received at their hands. The team has never played with such a pleasant and personally refined group of lads as met them on the diamond at Le Mars. May our pleasant relations continue.

Fairbrother's finger luckily did not keep him out of the game. "Fairy" is a sticker, you see.

Lincoln High school plays a return game here on Friday, the 5th of June. Everybody out.

The prospects are good for a fine team next year. The team will lose Robertson, Fairbrother and Greenleaf.

"Little Put" is putting on the finishing touches on his foot ball schedule for next fall.

There is to be a benefit ball game soon between the O. H. S. team and a faculty team. Proceeds go to the encampment fund.

Richard Hunter has been appointed captain of the second team.

Alumni

Frank Engler, '95, is in the lumber business at Kearney, Nebraska.

Jack Cooper, '97, is an engraver for Mawhinney-Ryan Co.

Herman Lehmer won the one mile in the Nebraska Knox-Track Meet.

Frank Devalon and Clarence Van Kuran were home over Sunday. They look brown and happy.

Herbert Johnson, '03, has gone to Wyoming as assistant cattle buyer for Armour.

Mary Stearns, '02, and Mary Bourke, '02, are having a merry time at the Uni.

J. Soderholm, '98, is going with a surveying party this summer through Colorado and Wyoming.

Bob Towne, '96, is with the Pacific Express Co.

Georgia Patersen is a kindergarten teacher at the Froebel school.

Howard Wareham, '02, is working at the M. P. ticket office.

Jay Fuller, '02, is attending the Omaha Medical College.

William Wherry, '98, is a graduate of the Omaha Medical College, '03. We wish him success.

Roy Pierce, '01, has been very sick at Lincoln.

Roy Wareham is at West Point.

J. C. Holmes, '01, is going out with a surveying party this summer.

"Art" Scribner was home for the opening of the Field Club. He is no freshman at golf.

"Major" Sidwell has been promoted to corporal of Co. "E" at the Uni.

Stuart MacDiarmid, '00, is a junior at the Creighton Medical College.

Frank Wilhelm is a freshman at Yale.

"Art" Schreiber, '00, is circulation editor on a Uni. paper called the "Nebraska."

Miss Florence McHugh, '95, is one of our German teachers.

Of the Class of Nineteen-three.

Ted Parrotte, '00, is in the insurance business.

Allen Hamilton is in the paint business.

Several of the alumni of the O. H. S., now attending the "Uni," sacrificed the pleasure of seeing their classmates defeat Knox in the track meet, to see the representatives of their alma mater defeat the L. H. S. at baseball.

"Spike" Kennard and Claude Robertson of our base ball team were entertained by some of the '01 boys at the Phi Si's frat house after the baseball game.

Harry Pierce, '03, is attending a business college in the city.

Squibs

Everyone felt lose, even Biddey managed to scrape up admission for two, but it surprised Grace when she discovered that the elephants really had trunks, never-the-less it was expensive for Jimmy because all the "stuff" that Ethel consumed failed to appease her appetite. She was like a barrel without a bottom. You couldn't fill her up and the "Bachelor's Friend" got in to see the show for half price because he was a Miner, but Margaret couldn't understand after Dent had "blew in" fifty cents for balloons why they "blew up" and the only satisfied one in the crowd was Adeline who drank the red lemonous lemonade and ate the raw peanuts without a murmur.

The reason "Sunny Jim" is such a Fair bowler is because he uses "Force."

Joy Sutphen says that when he grows up he is going to be a policeman, because he looks so nice in a uniform.

It is getting quite serious with Grace. The other day she went to the jewelers with John to Pick-e-ring.

Some people receive their names rather queerly. One hot summer day a school girl came home tired and hungry and called out:—"Ma—honey." She was born in May and therefore received her name May Mahoney.

Frank Creedon got his wisdom teeth the other day. We expect a change for the "best."

The P. G. S. girls gave a play. Taylor liked it because it was full of old maids.

A man saw for the first time a school girl go through her gymnastic exercises for the amusement of the little ones at home. After gazing at her with looks of interest and compassion for some time, he asked a boy if she had fits. "No," replied the boy, "them's gymnastics." "Ah, how sad!" said the man: "how long's she had 'em?"

Exchanges.

The High School World has an artistic cover for the last number.

The story entitled "Ellen's Birthday Gift to Mother" in the Recorder is very interesting.

The Poem entitled "The Editor's Dollar," in the Gleam, is well worth the reading. This paper is one of our best exchanges.

Teacher—Define emanation. Pupil (aside)—That must be a sister of Carrie Nation—Ex.

The article entitled "Retribution as Shown in the Tragedy of Macbeth" is well written and shows a good knowledge of the play.

The second number of the Tabor Talisman is not as good as the first one we received.

The Item, from Le Mars, improves every month and the last issue has the best cover of any.

The Monthly Maroon, from Chicago, is always most welcome and we take especial interest in it.

The Cosmos is the best paper we receive in giving us an idea of class work and school spirit.

Women's faults are many Men have only two:

Everything they say,

And everything they do.

We extend a hearty welcome to the Drowville High School Nugget and congratulate the staff on their success.

The Purple and Gold contains an interesting sketch of Prince Henry's arrival in America.

The Pedestal, from Walla Walla, Washington, is a well regulated paper and shows careful work on the part of the staff.

We have one fault to find with the Echoes, from Council Bluffs, and that is that they scatter the advertisements through the literary parts of the issue.
