Carrigan's Christmas.

The spirit of Christmas generosity touched the hearts of all, and even hard-hearted Carrigan, the scientific liar, was so deeply affected that he refused to reap the benefits of a month's hunting and scheming in order that a little child might still retain its faith in the dearest of all childhood tales—Santa Claus.

Carrigan was trailing for Blackstone, the lawyer, and early in December happened on a clue to one of those smoothest of Blackstone's delinquents. Gus Johnson had successfully eluded three of Carrigan's predecessors and Blackstone himself had offered the trailer an extra five per cent if he caught the man before New Year's.

Now, trailing, contrary to the impression left by the word itself, is a very respectable occupation. A lawyer is given charge of a number of non-collectable bills. He sues, gets a judgment for a certain amount, and the defendant, or the man who was sued, either pays the bill in cash or is forced to give the lawyer his "assignment," which is a statement by which the lawyer may legally collect his salary before he, himself, sees it, if he fails to make regular payments. In theory, this seems ideal, but in practice the assignor jumps from place to place so fast that it is next to impossible for a staid and sober barrister to keep track of him. Therefore a trailer is engaged to hunt him down, and although the job requires some neat prevaricating at times, it is strictly legal and often very exciting.

By the middle of December Carrigan had made little progress, but finally learned through a street car conductor that Johnson was working on the Liberty building, which was just being completed in the heart of the city.

Many an indiscreet trailer, by making his business known to the object of his hunt, not only lost the commission he would have received (a man will throw up his job and draw his money the minute he suspects that his wages are going to be assigned), but got a severe "beating-up" in the bargain, for when a man realized that his month's wages are about to be plucked from out his yawning pocket, he is apt to feel a little peevisish and is very likely to resort to the use of a little violence to cool his wrath.

Carrigan knew this and advanced with caution, hoping to learn in just which part of the building Johnson was employed, without making himself known. He stepped into the elevator and accosted that bearer of general information, the elevator boy.

"Don't know the gent," was the answer. "He might be down in the basement, though; get in and I'll take you down."

The elevator first went up, distributing its cargo on different floors, and then dropped to the basement, empty.

Carrigan was a little fearful lest the operator was taking him to Johnson, personally, but before he could suggest a different course the cage stopped in the dark and gloomy basement.

The operator slipped a little bolt which locked the elevator on the inside, grabbed the leg of his stool, and turning malignantly on Carrigan, growled:

"I'm Johnson; now what do you want?"

"Why—er," stammered Carrigan, "have you any life insurance, Mr. Johnson?"

A look of relief passed over Johnson's face.

"Uh," he muttered awkwardly, unbolting the door and resuming his seat with a sigh of relief. "I thought you were some one else. No, I don't want any life insurance now, wait till after Christmas."

"Where can I see you after Christmas?" asked Carrigan naively.

"Why—I guess I'll be around here some place." Then after a pause, "Yes, I'll be around here."

Carrigan emerged upon the street and mopped his brow.

"If he'd ever swung on me with that stool, it would have been 'good night' for yours truly," he reflected. "Well, let's amble out and see what Mrs. 'Gus' has to say about it."

He found a little ragged blue-eyed urchin playing in the yard before the tumble-down cottage.

"Hello, mister," called the child as Carrigan opened the gate.

"Why, hello there, sonny," answered the near detective. "Do you live here?"

"Yes, sir," was the timid answer.

Carrigan produced a handful of peanuts and gave them to him.

"Where's your daddy, little boy?" he asked, still intent upon the search.

The boy hesitated.

"Tell the man where daddy is," interrupted a pleasant voice from the house.

Carrigan turned and recognized Mrs. Johnson in the doorway.

"He's a bright boy," he ventured, feeling forced to say something.

"He's bright, all right," returned Mrs. Johnson. "But oh, so headstrong; he's just set on a new sled for Christmas and I don't see how we can do it."

"Mr. Johnson working?" asked Carrigan.

"Oh, yes, he's been working all this week; he'll get his Christmas money tonight and we're going to give Charlie—that's the boy—a t-r-e-e," she answered, spelling the last word, so the boy could not understand. "This is the first Christmas he's ever been with his daddy and Mr. Johnson is that anxious to give him everything he wants, it will probably be the ruination of him."

A battle was raging in Carrigan's breast. He needed the commission, and the glory of "spotting" Gus Johnson would be great; still, to deprive little Charlie of his tree, to shatter his dream of Santa Claus. Perhaps Carrigan was getting sentimental, perhaps he was thinking of his own boyhood days when he stoutly believed the myth, but at any rate, he asked Mrs. Johnson briskly if she wanted any insurance (as a graceful exit), wished her and the boy a Merry Christmas, and strode manfully down the street, with a singing in his heart that seemed to say, "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

C. H. C., '14.

Almost a Romance.

PART ONE.

"I just love football players," she breathed, looking up admiringly into his handsome face. "It must be simply grand to play on the high school team, and to run with the ball and make touchdowns, while all the people shout and stamp their feet, and say, 'He's all right.'"

"Yes," he replied, "football is a great game, but it isn't any snap being on the high school team. It's simply work, work, work every day, getting ready for the games at the end of the week. But all we have left now is the game to decide the championship, on Thanksgiving day. I hope you'll be there."

"Why, I should say I will! I wouldn't miss it for the world! And you're going to be in it, aren't you? Won't that be just too nice! And I'll wave my handkerchief at you so you'll know I'm there. And if you don't make just lots and lots of touchdowns, and show that other team that they don't know how to play football, I'll hate you forever."

"But, really, I must go in now," she concluded. "Now don't forget what I said," and she waved her finger at him in warning. "If you don't win the game for us I'll never speak to you again!"

Harold had at last met the girl of his dreams! For weeks he had seen her, admired her, dreamed of her—and now he had met her, had talked to her, had even taken her to her home.

Her tiny hand had brushed against his, and he had felt a thrill the like of which he had never known before. Her eyes were blue—a deep blue, the blue of the ocean—and a glance into their depths seemed to reveal things that were not for mortal sight.

And her lips, her hair, her cheeks—how could one describe them without doing them too gross an injustice? Who would not have become enslaved who had listened to her voice, so soft, so sweet, so low? And he had met her, had escorted her to her home! And she had promised to remember him at the game. Would she really do it, or was it all in jest? He could not tell. Who could tell anything when under her influence, one who could outcharm Circe, and make Helen of Troy but a mediocrity?

But now he recalled her other words—that he must win that game or forfeit her friendship. Could she really mean what she had said? Yet, she had said it, and he must believe.

A sudden realization of the hopelessness of his case rushed upon him. What could one player do in a football game? How could he win the game, when it was as much as he could do to hold his place on the team? How cruel were the fates, to give him a hope and then snatch it away when it seemed brightest!

And yet he would try. He could not surrender her without a blow. If she remembered him at the game, as she said she would, he would summon all his resources for one superhuman effort to win. Her remembrance of him would put new life into him, put new force into his movements. How great were the issues at stake; how sweet would be success—how bitter defeat!

PART TWO.

The last quarter of the game had begun. The visiting team had scored a field goal, the home team, nothing. The players, weary and exhausted, again faced each other, grim determination in the faces of all, except our hero, the halfback on the home team.

In his face might be read discouragement, hopelessness, almost indifference, for he had seen no sign of a handkerchief being waved at him—she had forgotten him. He had done his best, he had fought gamely from the first of the game until now, but he was disappointed and sick at heart. What was the use now, if she had not remembered? Still, he could not really blame her—she had known him for but a short time, and her words had probably been spoke thoughtlessly. What right had he to expect anything from her; he was not extraordinarily handsome; why should she remember him?

And yet, if she had remembered him, he might have played even better than he had played, and the team might not now be on the verge of defeat. One touchdown would mean victory, but he cared not, now. Football was no longer a noble game to him—it was brutal, bloody, and the players were actuated by the motives of beasts, not of humans.

The signals rang out, and he took his place. It was force of habit, nothing else. He was to carry the ball this time, but it made little difference to him.

He took the ball and then, suddenly, his eyes caught, in the grandstand, the waving of something white. Maybe she had remembered him, after all! He came to life again. The blood surged in his veins. Here was his chance; he would show those other fellows!

With the fury of a maniac he dashed through, forced an opening. He ran. Somebody rose up to stop him. His arm shot out. There was a groan—a fall. The field was clear before him.

The game was over. The crowd was beginning to disperse, as he pushed off of the field in search of her. Where was it that he had seen the handkerchief? There it was—it still waved. O, horror of horrors—it was not a handkerchief, it was a piece of cloth tacked up to a post, and on it were the words "Section A."

His heart sank, his senses reeled. It was all for nothing, then. She had deserted him; he was nothing. He started to walk, he knew not whither, and—

A tiny hand was pulling at his, in vain endeavor to shake it. "Oh, Harold, you were simply splendid," a voice reached his ears. He looked. A thrill ran through his body. Her eyes were blue, a deep blue, the blue of the ocean, and a glance into them—

No, it was not the maiden in the first part of our story. 'Twas but his sister, and with a disdainful glance he walked past her into the clubhouse, and his heart was sad.

SANDS WOODBRIDGE, '13.

DEBATING

With the close of football comes debating. Last year we had one of the most successful debating seasons that the O. H. S. ever had. Every boy of last year's squad feels that this success was due to the efficient coaching of Prof. Edward Burke. Professor Burke is with us again this year and with him in charge a most successful season is assured. The first call for the debating candidates was issued November 18. About thirty-five boys, the best debating material in the school, turned out. The first preliminary to reduce this number will be held on Tuesday, December 17. The present arrangements are to have a triangular debate with Council Bluffs and South Omaha on the commission form of government, to debate West Des Moines on the same question, and to debate Lincoln on the single tax.

We must add four more scalps to our belt this year. Council Bluffs and South Omaha must be snowed under so deeply that they will never find their way out. We've got to defeat Des Moines (r-r-r-revenge) and as to Lincoln (biff! bang!) there must be nothing left of them to tell the tale.

We have the men and the coach. What we want now is the school boosting behind them. There really is no excuse for not attending a debate. Everyone knows so much about the subject. There isn't a pupil in the high school who doesn't argue in his class at some time or other. What would we do were it not for these little arguments? It is these little debates between the teacher and the pupils that enliven the class, that help pass the time away and incidentally aid a class of students afflicted with a disease known as "sluffingitis." We must confess we all know how to argue when necessary. Then why do we hesitate to attend an interscholastic debate? Let's wake up. Let's get behind the team and push. Let us show the O. H. S. that we are loyal boosters, not disloyal knockers.

THE BOOSTER'S CLUB.

== LOCALS ==

During the past month the several classes have met under their newly elected officers and have tried to conduct business. Jim doesn't make such a bad president, after all, and Paxton is fine. (He reads Roberts' "Rules of Order" three times a week.)

The Seniors met late in November, and after a lengthy discussion and fine oratory on the part of Frank Hixenbaugh (and a nice lavender and black crepe) the colors were changed to blue and gold.

The Juniors have decided on their pins and have selected cerise and white for their colors. From the present outlook the Juniors seem as dissatisfied as the Seniors in the colors they have selected.

The lectures by Professors Fling and Grumman have begun and will be given each Monday in the auditorium. The lectures are very interesting and a few more tickets may be obtained at the Public Library.

Miss McHugh talked to the Junior and Senior girls during the suffrage convention. Looks rather suspicious.

Mr. Coburn of the Coburn players gave a short talk to the girls on the Shakespearcan drama November 17.

These meetings are to be held regularly once every two weeks, according to Miss McHugh.

The High School chorus, under the direction of Miss Arnold, gave their initial concert on December 4. Besides the chorus singing several excellent solos were given and Mr. Mills gave a number of fine readings. The proceeds of the concert will be applied toward the purchase of a Victrola.

Miss Paxson says the Seniors are far worse talkers than the Freshmen, and she ought to know.

The Juniors are contemplating giving a gold medal to Mr. Reed for the protection he rendered them at the recent Senior meeting.

The annual collection for the Visiting Nurses was taken up the day before Thanksgiving. The sum of $128 was contributed.

Mr. Burke, our last year's debating coach, is with us again, and promises a winning team.

Through the efforts of Frank Hixenbaugh, president of the Boosters' Club, a large twenty-foot banner has been loaned the school by Benson-Thorne. This banner was used at the last few football games and showed off finely.

Mrs. Atkinson was absent from her classes on December 5 and left her classes in charge of some pupil for that hour. (Just like a suffragette.) Of course there was perfect order. The new additions to the faculty are Frank Hixenbaugh, Kenneth Craig, Austin Owens, Barney Kulakofsky and Carlisle Allan.

We wonder whether Coach Mills turned out a state championship team "For His Mother's Sake," or because "His father was just wrapped up in him."

Dr. Senter is using a stereopticon to illustrate his lectures.

EDITORIAL

The Boosters' Club.

Certainly there is no organization in the school more interested in the affairs of the school than the Booster's Club. The club is an honorary body, representing the school at large, because of some office which entitles them to membership. The purpose of the club is the boosting of all school activity and the members are always alert to any plan by which the school may be helped. It is through the efforts of the club that visiting teams are entertained and that the athletic activities are advertised. This work falls on committees. The club this year is lucky in having for its president Frank Hixenbaugh, '13, who is the ideal man for the position.

The entertainment committee consists of McShane, Gideon and Selby, and the advertising of Durkee, Smith and Allan.

The Review of the Football Season.

The Omaha High School has just finished one of the most successful seasons in its entire history, having lost but one game out of the nine played now, we may certainly sing that our team has "style all the while."

Although at the beginning of the season the outlook was far from favorable, as the material was practically all new, the team developed into one of the fastest in the United States, some dopesters even giving them second among all the teams in the country.

Besides from the standpoint of many victories, the year has brought fine financial returns, increasing the athletic fund by $470. This may be traced partly to the excellent weather which prevailed throughout the season, but mostly to the increasing loyalty of the rooters. Director Reed and Manager Porter certainly deserve great credit for their excellent handling of the funds.

Credit for the remarkable success of the team must be given to the school at large, to the Director of Athletics, to the men themselves, both on the first and second teams, and last, but by no means least, to the coach—"Tommy" Mills. The school has certainly been most fortunate in securing his services and in congratulating Mr. Mills and the team on their excellent record we wish them the greatest success in the future.

The Register and the Commerce.

A great deal of undue excitement and comment has been caused recently by a report published in a local paper, in regard to the feelings existing between the publications of the two High Schools.

As the brunt of this report seems to be directed against us, we take occasion to vindicate both ourselves and the representatives of the Commerce.

The charges on the face of them are as absurd as they are false. Whereas the report states the reason for the resignation of the Business Manager of that paper, was the pressure which we brought to bear upon him, the fact of the matter is that his resignation was occasioned for personal reasons only, and that, according to his own statement, he was in no way influenced or coerced by us.

The feeling between the two papers is as friendly as that existing between the two schools, and we welcome the Commerce into the field, wishing them every success in their enterprise.

Staff Changes.

During the past month several changes have occurred in the staff, due to resignations and other reasons, and we have filled their places with new WORKERS. Due to the resignation of Fred Bucholz as Squib Editor, Morton Rhoades has been changed from the position of Athletic Editor, which he filled so creditably, to fill the position left vacant by Bucholz's resignation. Foy Porter is now holding Rhoades' former place.

Because she thought she could not handle the position of staff artist, Elizabeth Finley has been succeeded by Marie Vernon and George Stocking.

To the School.

The Register Staff takes great pleasure in extending to the pupils and faculty best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

$1.50 Poodle Dogs, 49c. Haines.

SOCIAL

The social events that occurred during this month filled up Thanksgiving vacation to the uttermost. This is an indication of the loyalty the High School students have towards their school, for while at school they work to their best ability, but during vacations they enjoy all the pleasures vacation affords.

On November 22 Eleanor McGilton entertained several girls at a house party. As all house parties are lots of fun, you can imagine the good time the girls had.

November 27 some of the High School boys gave a dance at Dundee Hall. About fifteen couples were present and no one lacked for a good time.

Some of the High School girls entertained at a progressive dinner, followed by a house party, at the home of Mrs. Budgett. The hostesses at the dinner were Gertrude Dickinson, Dorothea Skriver, Sara Sears, Katherine Sriver and Louise Flupp.

On Thanksgiving day several High School girls entertained out-of-town guests at a progressive dinner and dance. On Friday Miss Anna Russell entertained for the visitors at luncheon at her home and in the afternoon the Omaha girls gave a theater party for them. Friday evening some of the High School boys gave a dance at Dundee Hall, to which all the visitors were invited. Saturday a luncheon was given at the Loyal Hotel, after which another theater party was enjoyed. In the evening some of the boys entertained at an informal dance at Dundee Hall, at which only the Omaha girls and their guests were present.

Miss Brandeis will give her annual dance for the team some time in December.

The Christmas holidays are already crowded with dances, banquets and other entertainment for the High School people and visiting alumni.

Domestic Science

Dear Bettykins:

It has been so long since I wrote to you last. But just wait until I tell you how busy all of "us girls" have been.

First there was the teachers' convention. If you could have been present you would have seen a group of girls scrubbing their kitchen equipments, from dishes to stoves, polishing the furniture and silver, dusting every nook and corner—all preparatory for the visitors expected the next day. But we all felt fully repaid, for we had two days' vacation. One of these days, however, several of the girls assisted the teachers in serving light refreshments, consisting of coffee, wafers and candy. We had a great deal of fun while the boys did the work. They were kept busy carrying coffee from the lunch room.

You remember about that famous game we had with Beatrice? We girls were so elated over it that, with Miss Turner's consent, we gave the football team a luncheon after school—not for encouragement (for they really didn't need that), but just as an act of appreciation for their good work.

We carried the table decorations out as nearly as possible in purple and white, having for a centerpiece purple and white Dresden flowered ribbon and chrysanthemums, candelabras with purple shades and purple and white candy. The following is the menu:

Creamed Oysters in Cronstances (Parsley)
Biscuits	Pear Pickle	Jelly
Peach Ice Cream	Sponge Cake

The boys apparently enjoyed themselves. Mr. Reed and Coach Mills spoke and they all gave yells for Miss Turner and the girls.

The next important event was Thanksgiving. One day we were very much surprised when we came to class. The table was set and Thanksgiving decorations were in evidence. Our curiosity was soon abated when our teacher announced that we were to select some girls who would partake of the meal and two who would serve it. The rest of the class were to criticise. In the meantime the menu on the board had appealed to us very much, so it was rather a difficult task to choose someone to eat while you yourself watched them. But that difficulty was soon surmounted, for it was to be an effigial dinner and they were merely to go through the semblance of eating. We had fun criticising this and objecting to that, but from this we learned how a table should be set, the correct manner in which guests should be seated, the proper method of serving and the easiest and most natural way to eat.

Our Christmas preparations promise to be the most enjoyable and instructive work of the year. We had an exhibit when each girl brought a gift she had made and they were all on display. This was of great value, for it gave us ideas on pretty and inexpensive gifts.

We are now beginning to make candy. This is very interesting.

I suppose you are busily engaged in making Christmas presents, as everyone seems to be, so I will not take up any more of your time.

As ever,

"JACK."

ATHLETICS

Omaha 3, South Omaha 0.

Omaha, mainly because of over-confidence, barely succeeded in defeating the fast team from South Omaha, 3 to 0. It was Platz who practically did all the carrying of the ball, and Gardiner with his excellent booting that kept Omaha from suffering defeat.

The only score of the game came when Omaha at the opening of the first quarter dropkicked the ball from the twenty-yard line. Here Omaha became overconfident and, although the ball was frequently near the goal, a fumble or incompleated pass would lose the ball. In the second quarter Omaha had the ball fifteen yards from goal three times, but each time lost it on a fumble. Nixon for South Omaha played an excellent game at quarter, often taking the ball through the Omaha line for gains of from five to fifteen yards. Old style football was used in the second quarter and at the end of the quarter a forward pass was made to Inkster over goal. This, however, was not allowed, as time had just been called.

South Omaha started the second half with a number of new men and they commenced by rushing the ball rapidly down the field. Nixon was the chief ground gainer for the Packers. Forward passes were used to great advantage by South Omaha and combined with the ragged playing of the Omaha team, carried the ball into dangerous territory. At one time the ball was five yards from goal when Omaha braced and held. Toward the last part of the quarter, with the ball on the fifty-yard line, South Omaha lost her last chance to score by a place kick. The kick was true but fell short by a couple of yards. At the opening of the last quarter the Omaha boys took a brace and played the best they played the whole game. The chance to score was lost, however, as the whistle blew with the ball on the eight-yard line.

Omaha was greatly handicapped by the loss of Smith and Berry, both of whom received injuries in the game with Sioux City.

The lineup:

Omaha.		South Omaha.
Rouse	R. E.	W. Sullivan
Carlson	R. T.	Fittle
Moser	R. G.	Bott
Baliman (C)	C.	McBride
Reese	L. G.	E. Sullivan
Nelson	L. T.	Menefec
Hughes	L. E.	Scoville
McFarlane	Q. B.	Nixon
Gardiner	R. II.	Connor
Platz	L. H.	Berlin
Sprague	F. B.	Lyman

Substitutes—Omaha, Inkster for Hughes; South Omaha, Connor for W. Sullivan, Strainholz for Fittle, Fittle for Bott, Rapp for Connor.

Referee, Miller of Notre Dame; Umpire, Lojgren of Nebraska; Head Linesman, Morgenthaler of Creighton. Time, 15 minute quarters.

Omaha 23, Lane Technical 0.

The Omaha High School football team closed a very successful football season by defeating Lane Technical School of Chicago, 23 to 0.

The team showed much improvement over that of the previous week and had lost all over-confidence. Smith and Drummond were back in the game and thus the line was much stronger. The stars of the game were Platz and Gardiner. In this game Gardiner made two goals from touchdowns and kicked three dropkicks. The first of these was for twenty-five yards, the second for forty-two and the third for thirty-seven yards. The forward pass worked the best for Omaha that it has this year. The visitors, however, failed in their three attempts. Omaha scored soon after the opening of the game, when Lane fumbled on the kickoff and Omaha recovered. By a series of line smashes the ball was brought to the one-yard line, where Carlson went over. Gardiner kicked goal. Omaha's second and last touchdown was made after a successful forward pass had placed the ball on the ten-yard line, from where Sprague went over. Gardiner again kicked goal. Smith's work on the line was the most terrorizing to the visitors, but he was removed from the game in the second quarter because of an injury to his knee. Adelberg for the visitors sustained a broken nose in the third quarter.

The lineup:

Omaha.		Lane Technical.
Rouse	R. E.	Burke
Carlson	R. T.	Rust
Moser	R. G.	DeLaney (C)
Baliman (C)	C.	Klinik
Nelson	L. G.	Huber

Hughes	L. E.	Lether
McFarlane	O. B.	Knipschild
Gardiner	R. H.	Mueller

Sprague	F. B.	Osborne

Substitutes—Omaha, Drummond, Inkster, Reese; Chicago, Adelberg.

Referee, Lofgren of Nebraska; Umpire, Potter of Union; Head Linesman, Montgomery of Wisconsin.

Basketball and Soccer.

Along with basketball this year, the same men are taking up soccer football. This, however, is merely an experiment, to see if the pupils like the game. It is a great game to watch and one which requires great skill. There has been a little practice on the school grounds and inter-class games will be arranged.

Unlike the football season, the basketball season opens with great prospects. Three of last year's team which won state championship are in the game again. Other men, such as Berry, Flothow, Platz and Bauman are likely candidates. Joe Drummond, center on the football team and a star basketball player, is said to be going to come out for the team. The schedule is not complete, but two games will be played with Lincoln and Sioux City. The team will enter the Tri-City League this year, but will only have seven scheduled games. The first of these will be December 14 with Council Bluffs. The class teams will be more in prominence this year than heretofore. There will be as many teams for each class as there are men who turn out. This, no doubt, will keep up the interest among the boys and they will be more willing to keep coming out.

MILITARY

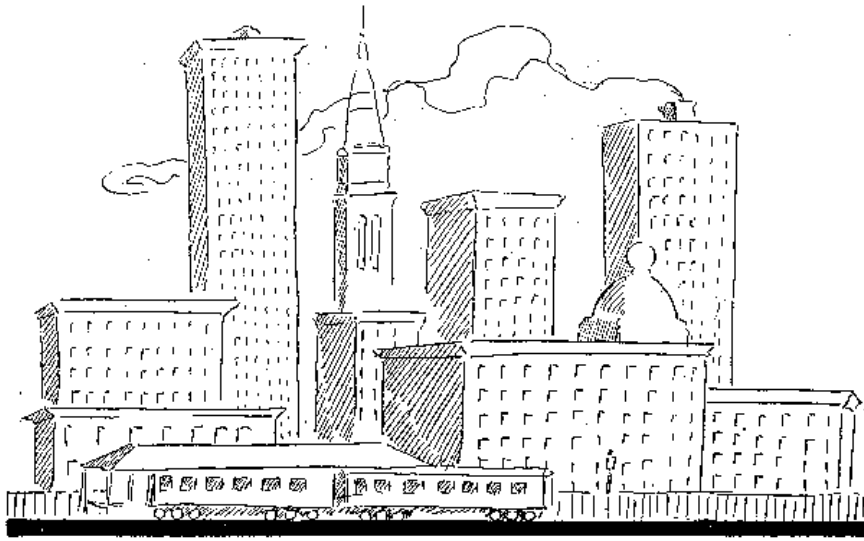

We can hardly be more optimistic in anything than in our Regiment. The manner in which drill, as a whole, has progressed during the last month, has been most wonderful. The whole new scheme, entered upon this year in the Military Department, while not producing immediate results, will produce lasting results at the end of the year.

Heretofore few lines have been devoted to the Band and its aid to the Regiment. But what could we ever do without music? We can hardly conceive of marching in a parade or ever having camp without the Band. We are sure that much of the spirit shown during drill would be lost. Knowing that music hath its charms, Bandmaster George Green has entered upon a new plan for producing music for the cadets. He has instituted a graded course of lessons for each player, beginning with simple exercises and gradually going higher in the course. He is taking each member of the Band individually and is teaching him how to play his instrument scientifically. In years past the musicians received no scientific training, but merely learned to play the few selections that were used. The result can easily be seen. We will soon have a Band worthy of a large university, or even the celebrated Sousa. The new course of instruction, besides having a good result this year, will also form a nucleus for bands in the future. The old men will know how to play and only Freshmen will have to be taught.

The request for new Manuals of Arms has been granted by the Board of Education and copies of them have been given to company officers.

An order was issued shortly afterward, discontinuing drill for all privates on Mondays, during the winter months. All officers and non-commissioned officers met in the school for officers, where instruction was given by Commandant Smith regarding the new manuals.

This system will obliterate the differences between companies in the use of rifles, and produce a uniformity that never before has been in the High School Regiment.

ALUMNI

The college write-up this month on Nebraska was written for the Register by R. MacParkinson, whom we all remember as editor-in-chief of the Register in 1911, and who as Major of the First Battalion in that year raised it to its high standard.

Mr. Parkinson is at present a sophomore in the University, College of Engineering.

University of Nebraska.

The University of Nebraska, founded in 1869, is a comparatively young school and therefore lacks the many traditions and customs which may be found about an older school and which go to make the school fond to the hearts of those who have been students there. It is, however, a growing institution and promises to be, at some future time, one of the most desirable schools of the middle west, not only because of its size, but because of its educational standard as well.

The campus proper is situated almost in the heart of Lincoln, while the Agriculture School campus is some three miles from town on a half section of fine farm land. The buildings are of various types of architecture, ranging from the old mansard roof of "U" Hall, erected in 1870, to the Doric cornices and Ionic capitals of the new law building just completed. The Engineering Hall is considered to be the finest on the campus and the most complete. It was designed by Dean Richards of the Engineering College and its construction was superintended by him. It is significant of the efficiency of this department of the university, inasmuch as it shows the standard of work taught to and expected of the engineering students.

The various departments of the University are very well equipped for study. The faculty in botany and mathematics are considered as good as the best in the country, and the forestry branch of the Agricultural College ranks the highest in the United States. The agriculture branch is at present the object of development, for each year the number of "Ag" students materially increases and the legislature appropriates thousands yearly for the development of this school and in increasing the scope of its work.

It is impossible in so small a space to describe to any appreciable extent the distinguishing features of this school at Lincoln. Those who have been students here will realize this when they call to mind the athletic contests, most of them Nebraska victories, by the way; the rallies, the Company "Q" and the torchlight parades. It is the endeavor of all those here to maintain the highest spirit and to manifest that spirit by active interest in all branches of college life. Nebraska is a large school which does things and its graduates and students are men and women with ability and ambition.

There is one thing that impresses a visitor to the campus, and that is a brown tablet set in the wall at the entrance to the Memorial Hall. On it are some fifteen or eighteen names and about them is the inscription, "In commemoration of the University cadets who fell in the Spanish war, 1898." It is a monument to the loyalty and patriotism of Nebraska's students, two of the most admirable characteristics of man.

Don't wait till you're an alumnus to dress well. Do it now—we'll help you. Magee & Deemer, 413 South 16th St.

TRULY UNFORTUNATE.

A young man cometh into ye study room and sitteth down at one of ye desks dedicated to ye pursuit of knowledge of ye various sorts. He readeth a book nonchalantly. Presently he glanceth up and spieth a maid who looketh good indeed to the eye. He glanceth yet again and then some more and murmureth to himself: "Presently I shall go over and ask to lug her books home and otherwise be of service to her." And he setteth back in his seat and regardeth with equally divided attention ye maid and ye book.

Presently there cometh along another youth who also spieth ye maid of comely mien, but he murmureth not to himself. Instead he doeth, and that immediately. So it cometh to pass that ye last youth and ye maid leaveth ye study room together while ye first youth remaineth alone to wrestle with disappointment and solid geometry, which all fitteth to ye old adage which runneth thus: "Ye good intentions are all very well, but ye deed getteth a lot more."

A FLUNKER'S PHILOSOPHY.

Students' faults are many,

Two is company, no doubt,
That's why the parlor lamp went out.

Some stores assume that the more grotesque the pattern and model the more attractive the garment for Young Men.
